Exhibit: Building a Barrier-Free Campus

Through September 16
Central Library, sixth floor Parlor

“Building a Barrier-Free Campus” explores how UTA began to become a model accessible campus for students with disabilities starting in the mid-1960s—a time when disabled students had no legal right to attend K-12 schools or college.

The exhibit covers a broad timeline and introduces viewers to both UTA’s status as a leader in disability accessibility today and the multi-championship-winning Movin’ Mavs adapted sports program. first panel of exhibit with multiple images “Building a Barrier-Free Campus” also showcases other disability rights initiatives to come out of UTA, such as major non-profit Helping Restore Ability, public transit activism, local K-12 adapted sports programs, and the Arlington Mayor’s Committee on People with Disabilities.

Exhibit made possible by support from the UTA Libraries, Department of History, Disability Studies Minor, College of Liberal Arts Festival of Global Ideas Fellowship program, and the Office for Students with Disabilities.
