The Texas Music Educators Association annually recognizes the outstanding student musicians and selected school ensembles in the state through the All-State and Honor Orchestra processes. Students selected for the All-State Orchestras are from high schools from around the state. Ensembles chosen to be one of the Honor Orchestras come from both junior high and high schools. Selection for these ensembles comes after months of hard work on the part of both students and teachers, as well as a rigorous selection process. The purpose of this thesis was to investigate the equity of these processes as they pertain to Title I and students from urban school districts. Data from the All-State Orchestra results from 2010-2020 showed that students from urban school districts were underrepresented by more than 50% of students from suburban districts, and Title I students were underrepresented by more than 80% of non-Title I students. Data from the Honor Orchestra finalist results from 2010 to 2020 showed that ensembles from urban school districts were underrepresented by more than 70% of suburban school districts, and

Title I schools were underrepresented by more than 95% of non-Title I schools. The implications of this data were discussed, including the unique challenges faced by urban music students and educators. Also investigated were the benefits of social emotional learning (SEL) for Title I students and methods for intentionally incorporating SEL into the music classroom. Suggestions for future research and a more equitable process for including students from urban districts and Title I schools were offered.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to acknowledge several people for their assistance in bringing this thesis to life. First, I would like to thank my family for their endless encouragement and support. I would also like to thank my Supervising Committee members, Dr. Graham Hunt and Dr. John Wayman, for their thoughtful feedback and for helping to bring this thesis to its full potential. Finally, I would like to thank my Supervising Professor, Dr. Diane Lange, without whom this document would not exist. Thank you for believing in me until the very end.

DEDICATION

This thesis is dedicated to all of my students, past, present, and future, for teaching me more about education than I ever thought possible. I am a more thoughtful person and a more compassionate educator because of you. Thank you for inspiring me daily and for allowing me to be a part of your world.

CHAPTER 1

TITLE I EXPLAINED

Introduction

Perceptions of Title I schools are as numerous and varied as the schools themselves. Title I schools, which receive additional federal funding to support educational opportunities for economically disadvantaged students, are often assumed to be in urban areas with run-down facilities and outdated materials. Students who attend these schools are expected to come from single-parent homes. The parent often has to work multiple jobs just to make ends meet, so many of these students are latch-key children with no one to look after them after the school day is finished. The demographics of Title I schools are often presumed to be majority non-white. Discipline issues are considered to be the norm in Title I schools, with violence happening on a regular basis (a colleague of mine who taught at a Title I school once had someone ask them if they had to wear a bullet-proof vest to school). Test scores are estimated to be low, and the teacher turnover rate is expected to be high. The perception of teachers who take jobs in these environments is either that they have taken the position as a last resort, or else that they are not qualified to teach in a “better” school.

These perceptions of Title I schools are misguided at best, and at worst paint a picture that all schools serving high populations of low-income students are suffering from what seem to be insurmountable obstacles. This thesis intends to dismiss these perceptions and discuss Title I schools and their music programs.

I have been teaching junior high orchestra in an urban Title I school for 11 years. This was my first job after graduating from a private university, and I cannot imagine teaching anywhere else. My background consists of attending high school in a wealthy suburban school district where my orchestra was chosen to be the Texas Music Educators Association (TMEA) Honor Full Orchestra during my senior year. The experience of performing at TMEA was formative in my decision to continue with music in college and eventually pursue music education. After graduating from a private university, I pursued jobs at schools that resembled the ones where I grew up because I knew from my own experience that these types of schools typically experience a lot of success. In hindsight, I am grateful that one of my college professors placed me for student teaching in an urban Title I district (the same district where I eventually accepted the teaching position I currently hold). Teaching in a Title I school has changed me as an educator and as a person. It has challenged me in ways that I never anticipated, and my passion for my students and the community that I serve inspired me to research and write a thesis on Title I music programs in urban districts.

The organization of this thesis is an article-based thesis focusing on Title I and urban districts. Chapter 1 will focus on the history of Title I and how these funds are used in schools in Texas. The discussion of Title I will continue into Chapter 2 with a focus on the effects state assessments have on music students and Title I funding in Texas. Chapter 3 will examine the Texas All-State Orchestra audition process and results from 2010-2020. This examination will continue in Chapter 4 by looking at the Texas Honor Orchestra process and selection of finalists and winners between 2010-2020. Chapter 5 will explain strategies for Social Emotional Learning (SEL) in the music classroom and why SEL is critical for Title I students.

History of Title Programs

Title I was signed into law by President Lyndon B. Johnson (LBJ) as a part of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA) of 1965. LBJ, who was himself a product of Texas public education and later an educator to economically disadvantaged students, firmly believed that education was the key to lifting people out of poverty. The ESEA was the cornerstone of his “War on Poverty,” and Title I was at the heart of that legislation. Title I and the other Title programs under the ESEA provide funding for “the education of disadvantaged children, strengthening teacher training, helping English learners acquire English and succeed academically, [and] providing after school and extended day school programs,” among other things (Grantmakers in the Arts, n.d., Summary of ESEA section). Some other Title programs include Title II—Preparing, Training, and Recruiting High-Quality Teachers, Principals, and Other School Leaders; Title III—Language Instruction for English Learners and Immigrant Students; and Title VI—Indian, Native Hawaiian, and Alaska Native Education. In spite of all the Title programs, Title I, the section of this law dedicated to the education of economically disadvantaged children, will be the focus of this chapter.

The purpose of Title I is to “[provide] supplemental funding to state and local educational agencies to acquire additional education resources at schools serving high concentrations of students from low-income homes” (Texas Education Agency, n.d., para. 1). At its outset, Title I “provided renewed support for the arts in the schools through cultural enrichment programs” (Abeles, Hoffer, & Klotman, 1994, p. 21). Schools that had previously been unable to afford to hire music teachers or provide instruments and equipment for their students found themselves able to grow their music education programs with the assistance of Title I funding. However, a 1973 revision of the ESEA provided more support for the development of basic skills, such as reading and math. This was frequently interpreted as support for remedial aid in those subjects, which reduced support for the arts in Title I programs during that time (Mark & Gary, 1999). During this time period, Title I funds were focused on academics instead of the arts.

The ESEA has been reauthorized by several administrations, each with its own set of updates and additions to the Title programs. The most notable reauthorization was the No Child Left Behind Act of 2002, which had very strict measures in place to define academic progress and track the accountability of both state and local education agencies and did not mention the arts. The most recent reauthorization of the ESEA is the Every Student Succeeds Act (ESSA) passed by President Barack Obama in 2015. The ESSA “allows SEAs [state education agencies] and LEAs [local education agencies] the opportunity to broaden their definitions of educational excellence” while also ensuring that the academic progress of traditionally underserved student populations is not overlooked (U.S. Department of Education, 2016, p. 1). The ESSA also provides a structure for SEAs and LEAs to implement diverse curricula and learning opportunities in order for students to receive a well-rounded education. The phrase “well-rounded education” is key here: an education that is well-rounded places equal emphasis all academic subjects, which includes the arts (U.S. Department of Education, 2016).

Use of Title I Funds

Schools that serve high populations of low-income students are eligible for Title I funds through either schoolwide or targeted assistance programs. Schools that have an economically disadvantaged student population, of at least 40%, are eligible for schoolwide programs. A schoolwide program is a “comprehensive reform strategy designed to upgrade the entire educational program in a Title I school in order to improve the achievement of the lowest-achieving students” (U.S. Department of Education, 2016, p. 2). All students at a school using a schoolwide program benefit regardless of their economic status. Schools with an economically disadvantaged population of at least 35% are eligible for targeted assistance programs. These programs do not serve every student on campuses receiving these funds, only those who are identified as being the most at-risk and having the greatest need. Schools that do not meet the 40% economically disadvantaged requirement for a schoolwide program can operate one of these programs “if the SEA has determined that a schoolwide program will best serve the needs of students in the school who are failing, or at risk of failing, to meet the challenging State academic standards” (U.S. Department of Education, 2016, p. 2-3).

The specific amount of Title I funding received by a district is determined by a formula involving the state per-pupil expenditure (SPPE) and the number of formula-eligible children (children from low-income families). Since Title I is a supplemental program, “districts are authorized to receive 40 additional cents for each SPPE dollar to spend on education services provided to disadvantaged students” (National Center for Education Statistics [NCES], 2019, p. 1). An authorization amount is calculated by multiplying the SPPE, which is the average spending per pupil in each state, by 0.40. This amount may then be adjusted by other provisions to arrive at a final allocation. According to the National Center for Education Statistics (2019), districts receive these allocations through one of four grants:

- Basic Grants are the largest component of Title I funding and serve the largest number of districts...Basic Grants provide funds to districts in which the number of formula-eligible children is at least 10 and exceeds 2 percent of the district’s school-age (5- to 17-year-old) population.
- Concentration Grants provide additional funds to districts with relatively large populations of low-income and disadvantaged children...in which the number of formula-eligible children exceeds 6,500 or 15 percent of the district’s school-age population.

- Targeted Grants provide additional funds to districts according to a weighting system...so that districts with higher numbers or higher percentages of children from low-income families receive proportionately more funds.
- Education Finance Incentive Grants (EFIG) differ from the first three types of Title I grants in that they are allocated in two stages: first at the state level, then...at the district level...The exact amount provided to each state varies depending on measures of state effort and equity in funding public education. (pp. 1-2).

Total school district allocations for Title I funding typically come from some combination of the above grants. Before Title I money can be used on a campus, schools must first complete a comprehensive needs assessment. The needs assessment identifies areas of strengths and weakness and helps guide the decision-making process in creating the plans that will be most beneficial to students who are either failing or at risk of failing to meet state standards. In addition to analyzing academic achievement data, schools must also “consult with a broad range of stakeholders, including parents, school staff, and others in the community...to understand students’ most pressing needs and their root causes” (U.S. Department of Education, 2016, p. 3).

Once the comprehensive needs assessment has been completed, schools must then develop a comprehensive schoolwide plan (also sometimes referred to as a campus improvement plan). The plan must address how the needs identified in the needs assessment will be met and how those strategies will be used to benefit the learning of all students in the school, especially those who are the lowest-achieving. Additionally, the plan must detail how the strategies will “strengthen the academic program in the school, increase the amount and quality of learning time, and help provide an enriched and accelerated curriculum, including programs and activities necessary to provide a well-rounded education” (U.S. Department of Education, 2016, p. 4). Typically, the plan will include the arts to fulfill the requirement of providing a well-rounded education.

In addition to having both a comprehensive needs assessment and schoolwide plan in place, schools must also adopt a “Supplement, Not Supplant” methodology. The purpose of “Supplement, Not Supplant” is “to help ensure that federal grant funds are expended to benefit the intended population defined in the authorizing statute,” rather than being used on expenses an LEA typically would have funded through other means (Texas Education Agency, 2018b, p. 1). When the ESEA was first signed into law, reports showed that LEAs were spending Title I funds on general expenses typically covered by their own budgets rather than on programs and services to support the children intended to benefit from this program. “Supplement, Not Supplant” provisions were added to the ESEA after this to make sure those funds were being used for their intended purpose: to support the education of children in poverty.

Once schools have these plans in place, they may use the Title I funds for just about anything as long as it is identified as necessary in the comprehensive needs assessment and listed in the schoolwide plan. LEAs must be able to document how the funds align with the purpose of the Title I program, “which is to provide all children significant opportunity to receive a fair, equitable, and high-quality education, and to close educational achievement gaps” (Texas Education Agency, 2021b, p. 73). Some examples of the usage of Title I funds include, but not limited to, purchasing school supplies for students, funding teacher salaries for additional positions to assist with student progress, translation services, technology repair, online tutoring, and equipment purchases. During the COVID-19 pandemic, when many districts were conducting learning online, schools receiving schoolwide Title I funding were able to use those funds to provide at-home learning resources such as internet hotspots and technology devices. In rare instances, Title I funds may even be used to provide meals for students in need. While the law is intended to provide academic support for those who are most in need, it also recognizes that students cannot learn if they are hungry. If the activity aligns with a school’s comprehensive needs assessment and funds are not available from any other source, Title I funds can be used as a last resort to provide “health, nutrition, and other social services not otherwise available to Title I participating students” (Texas Education Agency, 2021b, p. 80).

In spite of Title I programs being around for over 50 years, there are still many misconceptions about what Title I funds may be used for. Table 1.1 provides some examples of these misconceptions and explanations from the U.S. Department of Education (2016) about the law.

Misconceptions Regarding the Use of Title I Funds in a Schoolwide Program

Misconception	Explanation of Law
Title I funds may be used only to support reading and math instruction.	Title I funds may be used in a schoolwide program to support academic areas that the school’s needs assessment identifies as needing improvement.
Title I funds may be used only to provide remedial instruction.	The purpose of a schoolwide program is to upgrade the entire educational program in the school in order to raise the achievement of the lowest-achieving students. This does not need to be achieved through remedial instruction, however. At times, this may be best achieved by preparing low-achieving students to take advanced courses — for example, providing an intensive summer school course designed to accelerate their knowledge and skills, offering an elective course to prepare them to take advanced courses, or providing after-school tutoring while they are taking advanced courses.

Misconception	Explanation of Law
Title I funds may be used only to serve low-achieving students.	Title I funds may be used to upgrade the entire educational program in a schoolwide program school and, in doing so, all students may benefit from the use of Title I funds. However, consistent with the purpose of Title I, the reason to upgrade the entire educational program in a school is to improve the achievement of the lowest-achieving students.
Title I funds may be used only for instruction.	Title I funds may be used for activities and strategies designed to raise the achievement of low-achieving students identified by a schoolwide program school's comprehensive needs assessment and articulated in the school's comprehensive schoolwide plan. For example, Title I funds may be used to improve the quality of instructional materials, improve attendance, improve school climate, counteract and prevent bullying, provide counseling, mentoring, and school-based mental health programs, or provide positive behavioral interventions and supports.

Title I in Texas

According to the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES), there were 8,991 public and charter schools operating in Texas during the 2019-2020 school year. Of those schools, 7,384 (82%) received Title I funding (NCES, n.d.). The Texas Education Agency (TEA) reported a greater percentage of economically disadvantaged students in the 2019-2020 school year (60.2%) than in the 2009-2010 school year (58.9%). Additionally, “the percentage increase in the number of students identified as economically disadvantaged (16.0%) was greater than the percentage increase in the student population overall (13.3%)” (TEA, 2020b, p. ix). This data shows that the need for Title I funding in Texas schools has increased over the last decade, as the number of students from low-income households has grown. This is possibly due to the recent rapid growth of the state’s population due an increase in job availability.

The areas with the highest concentrations of economically disadvantaged students can be seen by looking at the total Title I allocations per formula-eligible child for different district types. These allocations are determined by the number of students eligible for support from Title I and the cost of education per student in each state. A 2019 NCES study found that the areas of the U.S. that had the highest allocations of Title I funds per formula-eligible child were the most densely and least densely populated areas (large cities and remote rural districts). This remains mostly true when looking at just the state of Texas (NCES, 2019). The largest cities in Texas had the highest allocations per formula-eligible child ($1,196), followed by midsize cities and remote towns ($1,062). Remote rural districts were not far behind at $1,046 allocated per formula-eligible child.

Table 1.2 shows the total Title I allocations by TEA district type for fiscal year 2020 as well as the average Title I allocations received by each district type. This data was gathered by cross-referencing the total Title I allocations for each Texas school district as reported by the U.S. Department of Education (2021) with its corresponding TEA district type (TEA, 2018a). For a complete list of Texas school districts and their corresponding Title I allocations, see Appendix A. Major Urban school districts (e.g., Dallas ISD, Houston ISD) received the most funding in both the total allocations for all districts of that type as well as the average funding received per district. Major Suburban districts (e.g., Plano ISD, Katy ISD) had the second highest total allocations with Other Central City (e.g., Abilene ISD, Waco ISD) coming in third, but those positions were reversed when looking at the average allocations received by each district of that type. Other Central City Suburban districts (e.g., Allen ISD, Temple ISD) came in fourth in both total and average allocations. Districts in the Non-Metropolitan Stable category (e.g., Coleman ISD, George West ISD) had the fifth highest total allocations and the sixth highest average allocations. Independent Town districts (e.g., Victoria ISD, Texarkana ISD) had the sixth highest total and the fifth highest average allocations. Rural school districts (e.g., Axtell ISD, Itasca ISD) had the seventh highest total and the lowest average allocations, and the opposite was true for Non-Metropolitan Fast Growing school districts (e.g., Celina ISD, Roscoe ISD). An extensive explanation of the different types of school districts found in Texas will be discussed in Chapter 2.

Total Title I Allocations by TEA District Type for Fiscal Year 2020

TEA District Type	Total Number of Districts	Total Title I Allocation	Average Title I Allocation
Major Urban	11	$471,195,596.00	$42,835,963.27
Major Suburban	79	$413,221,330.00	$5,230,649.75
Other Central City	38	$269,557,138.00	$7,093,608.89
Other Central City Suburban	164	$225,400,882.00	$1,374,395.62
Independent Town	68	$85,501,189.00	$1,257,370.43
Non-Metropolitan Fast Growing	28	$3,695,128.00	$131,968.86
Non-Metropolitan Stable	173	$94,350,266.00	$545,377.26
Rural	460	$53,743,220.00	$116,833.09

The total and average Title I allocations for Texas school districts aligns with the NCES data regarding total allocations per formula-eligible child. School districts with the highest populations (Major Urban, Major Suburban) received the most Title I funding. Texas data differs slightly from national data in that the second-highest allocations went to the second most highly populated school districts (Other Central City, Other Central City Suburban). Districts with the lowest populations (Non-Metropolitan Stable, Rural) were not far behind with the third highest allocations per formula-eligible child.

Implications for Fine Arts Programs

The TEA (2021b) published a document addressing many questions from LEAs about the appropriate usage of Title I funds. Several of these questions were specific to the use of these funds for fine arts programs. The questions ranged from whether these funds could be used to pay for the salaries of music and art teachers, pay for the professional development of these teachers, or whether the funds could be used to procure instruments for the school. The answers to each of these questions essentially boiled down to yes—if it can be justified with the comprehensive needs assessment and the campus improvement plan already in place for Title I schools. Title I funds are meant to be used for people, services, and programs that will benefit all students and raise the achievement of the entire school, particularly those who are the most at risk. This is important because fine arts programs have an immense impact on school environment and student engagement, both of which assist in the Title I goal of raising the achievement of at-risk students (California Alliance for Arts Education, n.d.).

The U.S. Department of Education (2016) states that Title I funding is not just for instruction and identifies improving school climate as one area where these funds can be used. Students cannot learn in environments where they do not feel safe or welcome, and arts programs are uniquely suited to provide safe places for students as well as improve the overall school atmosphere (California Alliance for Arts Education, n.d.). Research shows fine arts programs teach students perseverance, help them stay engaged in school, and boost parent involvement (Mathy, 2020). By showing a need for the benefits provided by fine arts programs in their comprehensive needs assessments and campus improvement plans, LEAs can use schoolwide Title I funds to support arts programs on their campuses.

TEXAS LAW AND MUSIC EDUCATION

Dante is a second-year violin player in his elementary school's strings program. His school is in a large urban school district. Dante is from a single-parent, low-income household, and as such he receives a free lunch at school. He also plays on a loaner instrument from the school since his family can't afford to rent a violin for him. Dante is not always able to attend after-school rehearsals and concerts since his parent's work schedule makes transportation to and from these activities difficult, but he is nevertheless a hard worker and wants to continue playing violin next year in junior high. He selected orchestra as his first-choice elective for 7th grade, but unfortunately Dante struggles academically in school and did not pass his state math and reading assessments. As a result, Dante's guidance counselor tells him he will have to take remedial math and reading classes in 7th grade in addition to his other core classes in order to help him pass the following year's assessments. This leaves no room in his schedule for orchestra. Dante is devastated because he loves playing his violin, but his guidance counselor tells him that there is no way around it. He will have to drop orchestra in 7th grade.

In the above vignette, Dante attended a school in an urban district in the state of Texas. The delineation of terms used to describe school districts may conjure up different meanings for different individuals. In order to establish concrete definitions, I will first examine the school district classifications as laid out by the Texas Education Agency (TEA). As stated in Chapter 1, the TEA has nine different classification types for Independent School Districts (ISDs) in Texas: Major Urban, Major Suburban, Other Central City, Other Central City Suburban, Independent Town, Non-Metropolitan Fast Growing, Non-Metropolitan Stable, Rural, and Charter School Districts. For the purposes of this chapter, I will be focusing on Major Urban, Major Suburban, and Rural school districts, but an explanation of all of the TEA district classifications will be explained for greater understanding.

TEA District Classifications

The TEA has nine different classification types for school districts: Major Urban, Major Suburban, Other Central City, Other Central City Suburban, Independent Town, Non-Metropolitan Fast Growing, Non-Metropolitan Stable, Rural, and Charter School districts. District type classifications are determined by enrollment, enrollment growth, and relative location to large urban areas. For the purpose of this chapter, Charter School districts will not be considered since they are by application only and are not necessarily representative of the communities where they are located. The majority of school districts in Texas are Independent School Districts (ISDs), which means they are operated by a school board independently of the local municipality.

The largest district type as defined by the TEA is Major Urban. TEA classifies a district as Major Urban if “(a) it is located in a county with a population of at least 1,020,000; (b) its enrollment is the largest in the county or at least 70 percent of the largest district enrollment in the county; and (c) at least 35 percent of enrolled students are economically disadvantaged. A student is reported as economically disadvantaged if he or she is eligible for free or reduced-price meals under the National School Lunch and Child Nutrition Program” (TEA, 2020-a, para. 1). There are 11 Major Urban school districts in Texas: Austin, Arlington, Dallas, El Paso, Fort Worth, Houston, North East, Northside, Socorro, and Ysleta ISDs. North East and Northside ISDs are both in the greater San Antonio area, and Socorro and Ysleta ISDs are both in the greater El Paso area.

The next largest district type is Major Suburban. A district is considered Major Suburban if “(a) it does not meet the criteria for classification as major urban; (b) it is contiguous to a major urban district; and (c) its enrollment is at least 3 percent that of the largest contiguous major urban district or at least 4,500 students” (TEA, 2020-a, para. 3). Districts can also receive the Major Suburban classification if they are not contiguous to a Major Urban district as long as they are in the same county as a Major Urban district and have an enrollment “at least 15% that of the largest Major Urban in the county or at least 4,500 students” (TEA, 2020-a, para. 3). There are 79 Major Suburban districts in Texas. Fort Bend, Grand Prairie, Katy, Mansfield, Pflugerville, and Plano ISDs are all examples of Major Suburban districts.

A district classified as Other Central City is classified as such if “(a) it does not meet the criteria for classification in either of the previous subcategories; (b) it is not contiguous to a major urban district; (c) it is located in a county with a population of between 100,000 and 1,019,999; and (d) its enrollment is the largest in the county or at least 75 percent of the largest district enrollment in the county” (TEA, 2020-a, para. 6). There are 38 Other Central City districts in the state. Amarillo, Corpus Christi, Denton, Lubbock, and Waco ISDs are examples of Other Central City districts.

Other Central City Suburban is the next smallest district classification. A district can be classified as Other Central City Suburban one of two ways: either “(a) it does not meet the criteria for classification in any of the previous subcategories; (b) it is located in a county with a population of between 100,000 and 1,019,999; and (c) its enrollment is at least 15 percent of the largest district enrollment in the county...[or] (a) it does not meet the criteria for classification in any of the previous subcategories; (b) it is contiguous to an Other Central City district; (c) its enrollment is at least 3 percent that of the largest contiguous Other Central City district; and (d) its enrollment is equal to or greater than the median district enrollment for the state of 897 students” (TEA, 2020-a, para. 9). There are 164 Other Central City Suburban districts in Texas. Allen, Cleburne, McKinney, Temple, and Wimberley ISDs are examples of Other Central City districts.

The Independent Town classification is assigned to a district if “(a) it does not meet the criteria for classification in any of the previous subcategories; (b) it is located in a county with a population of 25,000 to 99,999; and (c) its enrollment is the largest in the county or is at least 75 percent of the largest district enrollment in the county” (TEA, 2020-a, para. 12). There are 67 districts classified as Independent Town in Texas. Brownwood, Marble Falls, Nacogdoches, Texarkana, and Victoria ISDs are examples of Independent Town districts.

The TEA has two Non-Metropolitan district classifications: Non-Metropolitan Fast Growing and Non-Metropolitan Stable. A Non-Metropolitan Fast Growing district is classified as such if “(a) it does not meet the criteria for classification in any of the previous subcategories; (b) it has an enrollment of at least 300 students; and (c) its enrollment has increased by at least 20 percent over the past five years” (TEA, 2020-a, para. 15). There are 31 Non-Metropolitan Fast Growing districts in Texas. Examples include Anna, Celina, Keene, Roscoe, and Sunnyvale ISDs.

The other Non-Metropolitan school district as defined by the TEA is Non-Metropolitan Stable. A district is classified as Non-Metropolitan Stable if it does not meet any of the previous criteria and its total enrollment is greater than or equal to the state’s median district enrollment. There are 166 Non-Metropolitan Stable districts in the state. Examples include Coleman, George West, Jacksboro, Mexia, Rio Hondo ISDs.

Rural is the smallest district classification as defined by the TEA. A district receives the Rural classification if it does not meet any of the previous criteria and has either “(a) an enrollment of between 300 and the median district enrollment for the state and an enrollment growth rate over the past five years of less than 20 percent; or (b) an enrollment of less than 300 students” (TEA, 2020-a, para. 19). There are 466 Rural districts in Texas. Axtell, Ector, Hico, Itasca, and Marfa ISDs are all examples of Rural school districts.

Major Urban, Major Suburban, Other Central City, and Other Central City Suburban districts tend to be in or near highly-populated metropolitan areas. Independent Town, Non-Metropolitan Fast Growing, Non-Metropolitan Stable, and Rural districts tend to be in less-populated, more remote areas of the state. The Major Urban district classification is the only one that takes the economic status of its student population into consideration. This is possibly due to the way school districts are funded. Texas school districts are funded in part by the state and in part by local property taxes. Highly-populated urban areas that have a greater low-income population may have lower property taxes, which in turn means funding for those local schools may not be adequate for the needs of that student population. In contrast, a suburban area with a high-income population may have higher property taxes, which would mean more funding for the schools in that area. The state “also guarantees school districts extra money for students considered more expensive to educate, including low-income students and those with disabilities” (Swaby, 2019, para. 8). The inclusion of the requirement for 35% of its students to be economically disadvantaged in the qualifications for a Major Urban school district may allow the state to provide additional funding those large districts need and are unable to get from local taxes. Additionally, a 35% economically disadvantaged population is the poverty threshold required for schools to be eligible for funding for a targeted assistance program through Title I.

Aligning this percentage with the poverty threshold for a Major Urban district may allow the state to channel more federal funding to high-poverty areas.

There are often assumptions made about the relative affluence or lack thereof of different classifications of school districts. Urban school districts typically have a high percentage of students who are economically disadvantaged (TEA, 2020-a). Suburban school districts are often assumed to be in affluent neighborhoods and attended by students from wealthier backgrounds. Rural school districts, like urban, are often assumed to be in less-affluent areas and attended by students from lower-income households. There are, of course, exceptions. It would be reductive to say that all school districts of any classification are exactly the same, or even that all schools within a particular school district all share the same qualities. Affluent schools are present within urban school districts just the same as schools with high percentages of economically disadvantaged students are present within suburban districts. A school's Title I status can be used to better understand the economic backgrounds of the students who attend that school.

Title I and Socioeconomic Status

Schools that are classified as Title I are schools with high percentages of economically disadvantaged students that receive additional government funding. According to the U.S. Department of Education, "Title I, Part A (Title I) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, as amended by the Every Student Succeeds Act (ESEA) provides financial assistance to local educational agencies (LEAs) and schools with high numbers or high percentages of children from low-income families to help ensure that all children meet challenging state academic standards" (2018, Program Description section, para. 1). Schools may use Title I funding for either targeted assistance or schoolwide programs. Targeted assistance programs only provide Title I services to those students who are either failing or at risk of failing to meet state academic standards. Schools whose enrollment is at least 40% economically disadvantaged are able to use Title I funds for schoolwide programs that support all students “in order to raise the achievement of the lowest-achieving students” (U.S. Department of Education, 2018, Program Description section, para. 4).

The Title I status of schools is largely determined by the socioeconomic status of the families living in the communities served by the school. Bernstein and Bradley (as cited in Albert, 2006) define socioeconomic status (SES) as the “relative position of individuals, families, or groups in stratified social systems where some societal values (e.g., occupational prestige, education) are not uniformly distributed” (p. 39). The relationship between SES and music education is multifaceted and complex. Demographic studies of participation in music courses show that low-SES students are underrepresented in school music programs. Stewart (1991) found that enrollment in performance-based classes was more likely among affluent and high-achieving students. Low-achieving and low-SES students were more likely to take non-performing classes such as music history or music appreciation, perhaps suggesting a financial barrier to the performing classes. Elpus & Abril (2011) published a demographic profile of high school music ensemble students in the United States and found similar results. Students from the highest SES quartile were 1.7 times more likely to participate in music than students from the lowest quartile.

Texas Law Protections for Electives

Even though the Every Student Succeeds Act (ESSA) allows states more flexibility in terms of proficiencies, test scores are still being used to determine accountability of student success. In Texas, there are two House Bills (HB) that attempt to control schools from pulling students out of classes for remedial tutoring and test preparation. HB 5 was passed in 2013 and took effect during the 2014-2015 school year. The primary purpose of this bill was to lay out a new graduation program for students entering 9th grade during the 2014-2015 school year called the Foundation High School Program. Also included as part of this bill, however, was language that limits pulling a student out of one class for remediation in another. Section 25.083 of HB 5 states the following:

The board of trustees of each school district shall adopt and strictly enforce a policy limiting the removal of students from class for remedial tutoring or test preparation. A district may not remove a student from a regularly scheduled class for remedial tutoring or test preparation if, as a result of the removal, the student would miss more than 10 percent of the school days on which the class is offered, unless the student's parent or another person standing in parental relation to the student provides to the district written consent for removal from class for such purpose (in Texas Music Educators Association [TMEA], n.d.-f, What the Law Says section).

In other words, administrators and counselors can no longer remove a student from any class (including music) for remediation without the express permission of that student's parent or guardian. HB 5 also amended the language of previous laws to state specifically that this limitation applies to grades K-12. The law also states that a student may not receive credit or final grade if they exceed this limitation without the school first receiving parental consent. The Texas Music Educators Association (TMEA, n.d.-f) points out that since credits are specific to high schools, "middle and elementary school principals quite often have interpreted the law to mean that it did not apply to them or their students, despite the fact that TEA legal counsel had ruled that credit and grade were synonymous in law" (TMEA, n.d.-f, What It Means section).

The addition of language specifying final grade as well as credit in these absence limitations makes it clear that this law applies to all grade levels.

Unfortunately, these specifications do not always stop schools from attempting to remove students from electives in the name of remedial instruction. A parent recently shared a story with me about how her son's junior high school attempted to obtain the parental permission required by HB5 by including that document among the many others requiring signatures at the school's registration:

When I inquired about this document, the counselor said that it was a document for all parents to sign as a convenience for us, the parents, so they did not need to contact us for a signature later in the school year. I said that HB5 was protection for electives, such as orchestra...and that this form was deceiving. I refused to sign the form...and the counselor said that [I] could not complete registration...unless [I] signed the form...[I] asked to talk with the principal who said that it was [my] choice to sign the form and allowed [me] to complete [my] registration. I was content with this answer until the principal would not allow me to take the form with me, so I took a photo and sent it to the band director, choir director and orchestra director of that school. I was so upset that the school tried to trick the parents into signing a form to pull our children out of their electives...Later, I was told by the orchestra director that the form was deleted from the stack of documents for future student registration (D. Lange, personal communication, March 22, 2022).

Parents who are unaware of the specifications of HB 5 and the fact that it is intended to protect electives (including fine arts courses) may not be fully aware of their rights regarding their child's education.

The recently-passed HB 4545 also includes language protecting electives. This bill came into effect on June 16, 2021, and is a response to the academic gaps that resulted from the virtual and hybrid learning situations that took place during the 2020-2021 school year due to the COVID-19 pandemic. The bill “establishes new requirements for accelerated instruction for students who do not pass the State of Texas Assessments of Academic Readiness (STAAR)” (TEA, 2021a, Overview section). Students who do not pass the math or reading STAAR tests in grades 3, 5, or 8 must now have an individual educational plan developed by an accelerated learning committee that is appointed by the Local Education Agency. Additionally, HB 4545 added language clarifying accelerated instruction requirements for students who do not pass the STAAR test in grades 3-8. These requirements must now include student assignment to “a classroom teacher who is a certified master, exemplary, or recognized teacher or...supplemental instruction (tutoring) before or after school, or embedded in the school day” (TEA, 2021a, Overview section). The accelerated instruction is intended to be provided in addition to the instruction normally received by the student during the school day. The key language in HB 4545 says that supplemental instruction cannot be scheduled in a way that requires pull-outs from “instruction in grade-level content for the foundation curriculum,” “instruction in enrichment curriculum for the grade level in which the student is enrolled,” or “recess or physical activity that is available to other students enrolled in the same grade level” (TEA, 2021a, Additional Statutory Highlights section, para. 3). Music is an enrichment course, which means that students cannot be pulled from music classes to receive supplemental instruction required by HB 4545 (TMEA, n.d.-e).

The Texas Music Educators Association (TMEA) plays an enormous role in ensuring the protections detailed above are included in Texas educational law. TMEA is a professional organization that provides a wide range of services and opportunities to music educators and students alike across the state. In addition to professional development opportunities provided at the annual Clinic/Convention, TMEA also “carefully monitors the actions of All-State decision-making bodies on issues affecting fine arts instruction in Texas” (TMEA, n.d.-a, para. 1). TMEA lobbies heavily on behalf of music educators and students to ensure that Texas legislation continues to support and provide protections for fine arts across the state. Furthermore, TMEA provides explanations to its members of the most pertinent sections of current educational laws, such as HB 5 and HB 4545, and how they apply to music education. TMEA provides links to relevant educational government agency websites as well as explanations of state standards and grade level requirements regarding music so that its members may better understand and advocate for their students.

Grade Level and Graduation Requirements

The Texas Essential Knowledge and Skills (TEKS) are the state educational standards that define what students should know and be able to do in every subject at every grade level. The TEKS are defined for every subject in the Required Curriculum, which is divided into Foundation and Enrichment subjects. Fine arts courses are part of the Enrichment Curriculum and are therefore required for students at each level. TMEA summarizes the grade level requirements for music:

- Elementary: School districts must provide TEKS-based instruction in all subjects/courses of the Required Curriculum in grades K–5, including music.
- Middle School: Each student must complete one fine arts course in grade 6, 7 or 8, and the district must offer courses in three of the four fine arts disciplines [music, dance, theater, or art] (or two, if reduced by the commissioner of education based on school size).

- High School: Every high school student must successfully complete one fine arts credit to graduate. Each district must offer at least two of the four state-approved fine arts subjects (n.d.-e, Grade Level Requirements section).

Additionally, HB 5 requires high school students to earn an endorsement, which is “similar to [a] college [major] and [is] intended to help high school students develop subject-area knowledge” (Holzman & Lewis, 2020, p. 1). Students can choose from one of five endorsements: arts and humanities, business and industry, public services, STEM, or multi-disciplinary. Students can earn an arts and humanities endorsement “by completing foundation and general endorsement requirements and...a coherent sequence of four credits by selecting courses from...disciplines in fine arts” (TEA, 2014, p. 25). In other words, a high school student who enrolls in a music ensemble class such as orchestra for all four years of high school can earn an arts and humanities endorsement, thereby meeting the graduation requirements set by HB 5. I have noticed an increase of students dropping orchestra in high school, since the passage of HB 5, because of the pressure they feel to earn an endorsement that will help them with their future career. Anecdotally, former students have shared with me that they feel pressure to prepare for college and careers, and many students claim they either don’t have room in their schedule for orchestra due to the endorsement classes they must take or because they want to focus on their studies.

While HB 5 and HB 4545 restrict schools from pulling students from electives classes where they are already enrolled, they do not specifically prevent students from being placed in remedial academic courses in place of an elective altogether. Students like Dante from the opening vignette are often not given a choice when it comes to remedial courses, and parents of urban and Title I students may be unaware of their rights regarding their child's education. While Dante will eventually need to take a fine arts course in junior high to meet the grade level requirements established by HB 5, instrumental music programs often require students to take those courses sequentially. Students who have to drop their ensemble for a year for remedial coursework may not be able to rejoin the following school year. Some instrumental music programs may allow students to rejoin if they take private lessons to catch up with their classmates, but for many Title I students this is financially impossible. Kinney (2018) found that SES not only plays a part in enrollment in instrumental music programs, it can also be a predictor for retention, noting that low-SES students are underrepresented in music electives. Kinney also notes that students who do well academically tend to enroll and continue in instrumental music programs and suggests that "what is being evidenced by these data is increased school engagement because of participation in music, which then leads to higher academic achievement" (p. 38).

The underrepresentation of low-SES students in music electives and presence of high achieving students suggests that low-SES students are not doing as well in school as high-SES students. This may result in more low-SES students getting placed in remedial courses in place of music when these are in fact the students who need music courses the most. Alegrado & Winsler (2020) also found that lower-achieving students were underrepresented in music electives, stating that "these students are not getting the same exposure to music in public middle school as other groups are, which unfairly denies them the potential positive effects of involvement" (p. 26). These positive effects can include academic achievement gained through increased engagement in school as well as social and emotional benefits (Elpus & Abril, 2011).

Students who are able to continue in music programs may also have the opportunity to participate in Regional and All-State ensembles, which can lead to further opportunities as those students begin to prepare for college.

TEXAS ALL-STATE DATA AND PROCESS

Participation in a Regional or All-state ensemble can open many doors for student participants. DeLorenzo (2012) suggests that “it may be beneficial to examine the diversity of participants in regional and all-state ensembles [to determine whether] the ensemble reflect[s] a population that is representative of the area schools” (p. 44). This chapter will examine the Texas All-State Orchestra audition process and student data from 2010-2020.

As previously stated in Chapter 2, the Texas Education Agency (TEA) is the state agency responsible for the oversight of primary and secondary public education in Texas. The TEA classifies school districts based on size and relative distance to large urban areas. TEA is also responsible for distributing Title I funding received from the federal government to school districts. Schools may use Title I funding for targeted assistance programs to help support the students most at risk of failing to meet state academic standards, or for schoolwide programs which benefit all students at the school regardless of economic background. The majority of schools in Texas that receive Title I funding meet the 40% economically disadvantaged requirement for use of that funding schoolwide.

University Interscholastic League School Conferences

The University Interscholastic League (UIL) has a different set of classifications based on the size of high schools. The UIL is a statewide organization that provides a structure for contests and competitions in areas including but not limited to academics, athletics, and music. According to the UIL, “Texas school people believe that there is more equitable competition on a state-wide basis when schools compete with other schools of comparable size. UIL member schools are divided into six conferences according to enrollment. Conferences, in order of enrollment, are 6A, 5A, 4A, 3A, 2A and 1A” (n.d.-b, Classification of Schools section). High school student enrollment for conference 6A is 2220 and above; enrollment for conference 5A is 1230-2219; 4A enrollment is 515-1229; 3A enrollment is 230-514; 2A enrollment is 105-229; and 1A enrollment is 104.9 and below (UIL, 2020). There are 1,492 UIL member schools in Texas and 44 are charter schools, which will not be discussed or analyzed in this paper. The conferences exist to level the playing field for statewide competitions (particularly in athletics), but for the purposes of this discussion the conferences will primarily be used as a descriptor for the size of various schools. While district type is often an indicator of the size of the high schools located within its boundaries, there is not necessarily a correlation between the two. For example, schools within a Major Urban school district can range from 3A up to 6A.

Texas High School Orchestra Programs

It is important for the reader to understand that not every school district in the state of Texas has an orchestra program. Table 3.1 shows the breakdown for the number of orchestra programs by TEA district type. School districts were considered to have an orchestra program if at least one high school in the district had an orchestra based on the 2019 fine arts enrollment data gathered by TMEA (n.d.-g). For a complete list of orchestra programs in Texas school districts, see Appendix B. Only 123 out of 1,023 Texas school districts have an orchestra program based on this data. There were 52 school districts that I could not verify the presence of an orchestra program (one Non-Metropolitan Fast Growing district and 51 Rural districts), but given the data for other districts of the same type it is likely that these school districts do not have an orchestra program. Major Urban is the only district type to have 100% of all districts in that category with an orchestra program. Other districts that have an orchestra program include Other Central City at 74.36%, followed by Major Suburban at 54.43%, Other Central City Suburban at 14.46%, Independent Town at 13.24%, Non-Metropolitan Fast Growing at 3.57%, Non-Metropolitan Stable at 1.16%, and Rural at 0.87%. Based on this data, orchestra programs are more likely to be found in more highly-populated areas. It is interesting to note, however, that while Major Suburban is the second largest district type as defined by TEA, only slightly more than half of districts of that type have an orchestra program.

Presence of Orchestra Programs in Different TEA District Types

District Type	Orchestra (n = 123)	No Orchestra (n = 848)	No Data (n = 52)	Percentage of Each District Type with Orchestra Program
Major Urban	11	0	0	100%
Major Suburban	43	36	0	54.43%
Other Central City	29	10	0	74.36%
Other Central City Suburban	24	142	0	14.46%
Independent Town	9	59	0	13.24%
Non-Metropolitan Fast Growing	1	26	1	3.57%
Non-Metropolitan Stable	2	170	0	1.16%
Rural	4	405	51	0.87%

The presence of an orchestra program in any given district does not mean that every school within that district has an orchestra on its campus. Table 3.2 shows the number of individual high schools who offer orchestra within all districts that have an orchestra program. This data is split by high schools that receive Title I funding and high schools that do not. For a complete list of Texas high school orchestra program data, see Appendix C. Of the 501 high schools that I was able to gather data for, 393 have an orchestra on their campus and 108 do not. Of the schools that do have an orchestra program on their campus, 178 (45.29% of the total) receive Title I funding, and 215 (54.71%) do not.

Table 3.2Presence of an Orchestra at Individual High Schools in Districts with an Orchestra Program*

	Orchestra	No Orchestra	No Data
Title I	178	82	5
Non-Title I	215	26	0
Totals	393	108	5

Table 3.3 shows the same information specifically at high schools in Major Urban districts. As stated earlier, Major Urban is the only district type to have 100% of its districts contain an orchestra program, however only five out of the eleven districts have an orchestra program at every high school in the district. There are 169 high schools with a UIL conference in Major Urban school districts in Texas, and 133 receive Title I funding. Seventy-six of these Title I schools have an orchestra program on their campus, while the other 52 do not. Of the 36 Major Urban high schools that do not receive Title I funds, only five do not have an orchestra program. When looking specifically at Major Urban high schools that do have an orchestra program on their campus, 71.03% receive Title I funding.

Table 3.3Presence of Orchestra Programs at High Schools in Major Urban Districts*

	Orchestra	No Orchestra	No Data
Title I	76	52	5
Non-Title I	31	5	0
Totals	107	57	5

Table 3.4 shows total and average student enrollment in Texas high school orchestra programs in 2019. I compiled the 2019 orchestra enrollment data gathered by TMEA and cross-referenced that information with TEA district types and Title I status (TEA, 2018-a; TEA, 2020-c; TMEA, n.d.-g). The average student enrollment for Major Urban school districts with an orchestra program is 662.45, and the average enrollment for Major Suburban districts is 342.21. The average enrollments for the other TEA district types are 207.48 for Other Central City, 118.04 for Other Central City Suburban, 27.44 for Independent Town, 14 for Non-Metropolitan Fast Growing, 97 for Non-Metropolitan Stable, and 14.25 for Rural. The total enrollment for orchestra students attending a Title I school is 8,820 (28.12%), while total enrollment for students attending a non-Title I school is 22,544 (71.88%).

TMEA and All-State Ensembles

As stated in Chapter 2, the Texas Music Educators Association (TMEA) is a professional organization that offers professional development opportunities to music educators across the state and monitors Texas state legislation for issues affecting fine arts. TMEA is comprised of five Divisions: Band, Orchestra, Vocal, Elementary, and College. TMEA also helps to encourage rigorous musical education across the state by hosting competitions at the Region and State level. Thousands of Texas high school students audition each year to be part of one of the All-State ensembles for the Band, Orchestra, or Vocal Divisions. Auditions for these ensembles are extremely competitive. Students who are selected to be part of one of these prestigious ensembles attend three days of rehearsals at the TMEA Clinic/Convention and perform on the last day of the Convention to sold-out concert halls. Conductors/Clinicians for the All-State ensembles include directors of highly respected collegiate and youth ensembles from around the country, as well as directors of professional ensembles. For example, at the 2022 TMEA Convention, Kevin Sedatole, from Michigan State University, conducted the All-State Symphonic Band; Vincent Gardner, from Jazz at Lincoln Center, conducted the All-State Jazz Ensemble I; Jeffrey Grogran, from Oklahoma City University, conducted the All-State Symphony Orchestra; José Hernández, from Mariachi Sol de Mexico, conducted the All-State Mariachi Ensemble; and Jason Max Ferdinand, from Oakwood University, conducted the All-State Mixed Choir. Rehearsals for the All-State Ensembles are open to all Convention attendees and typically are an educational experience for teachers and students alike. In addition to a highly educational experience, membership in an All-State ensemble may help students earn music college scholarships.

Procedures for Collecting All-State Student Data

For the purposes of this chapter, I will be focusing on the All-State Orchestra ensembles. Students who are selected for the TMEA All-State Orchestra are placed by rank order in one of three ensembles: Symphony (the top third of students), Philharmonic (the middle third), or Sinfonietta (the lower third). Each of these three ensembles is a full orchestra containing strings, woodwinds, brass, and percussion. The inclusion of harp and piano players in each ensemble is determined by the requirements of the concert repertoire. For example, if the Sinfonietta Orchestra is not performing a piece that requires a piano player in a particular year, then no pianists will be placed in that ensemble for that year. Prior to 2019, the Sinfonietta Orchestra was called the String Orchestra and did not include winds or percussion (only, as the name suggests, string players with harp and piano players as needed for programming requirements). The ensemble was changed to a full orchestra to allow more wind and percussion players the opportunity to play in a full orchestra setting at the All-State level. The requirements for the placement of string players in this ensemble did not change with the addition of wind and percussion players. The audition process is outlined below.

The data for the TMEA All-State process can be found on the TMEA website (www.tmea.org). The TMEA website consists of historical data of All-State musicians dating back to 1940. The search feature allowed me to search for All-State Orchestra student data between 2010 and 2020. The data published on this website lists names of students, instrument, school, and city of those students who advanced to the final round. TMEA does not have published data from earlier rounds in the audition process. Also, as just stated, the TMEA data consists of the name of the city where the school is located, not the school district. As a result, I did a separate search to verify the school district for each school listed in the TMEA data. The data of All-State Orchestra musicians from 2010 to 2020 can be found in Appendix D.

TMEA All-State Orchestra Audition Process

TMEA is divided into 33 Regions “to carry out TMEA objectives at the local level, to guarantee representation on the State Board of Directors, and to provide opportunity for individual participation in TMEA activities” (TMEA, 2016, Article V, Section a). Each Region is comprised of neighboring districts and has a similar student population to other TMEA Regions in the state. As a result, Regions in highly populated metropolitan areas may only have four or five school districts, while Regions in less populated areas may have 70 or more school districts.

Auditions for placement in one of the three All-State Orchestra ensembles begin at the Region level. While specific Region-level audition dates vary from Region to Region, these auditions typically take place in October. The TMEA Orchestra Division Vice President, with consultation from experts such as college professors, chooses etudes from a standard set of etude books for each instrument. The etudes that are being used for auditions are announced at the beginning of the summer prior to the fall auditions. Students spend the summer learning the entirety of both etudes before the audition cuts are announced later in the fall. Any student who wishes to participate may audition for their Region's All-Region Orchestra. There is no limit to the number of students on each instrument who may audition at this level, and it is up to each Region to determine the number of ensembles where their students will be placed as well as the instrumentation for each ensemble. Upon completion of the Region auditions, students who want to try for a spot in one of the All-State Orchestras will move on to make a recording for the Area level audition. Area auditions typically take place at the end of October, usually one to two weeks after Region-level auditions. The selections that students record at this level include cuts from two different etudes as well as cuts from the orchestral repertoire selected for that year's All-State performances. The orchestral cuts typically come from the repertoire selected for the top performing ensemble.

Each TMEA Region has a maximum number of students per instrument that they may send to record at the Area level, which guarantees a maximum number of students auditioning statewide. Table 3.5 shows the maximum possible number of students auditioning at the Area level and the total number of students selected per instrument for one of the All-State Orchestra ensembles. Regions that consistently have more than their allotted number of students per instrument, who want to record for Area, will use an elimination round to determine which students get to move on to the Area round. Regions that have fewer than their allotted number of students per instrument, interested in recording for Area, will typically use the results of the All-Region auditions to qualify their students for the next round. Regions with smaller orchestra enrollment numbers rarely get close to their allotted number of students for state-level auditions. For example, only eight students out of the possible 74 allotted to Region 1 (a primarily Rural Region in the northwest part of Texas) auditioned for All-State during the 2019-2020 school year. This is not an altogether surprising figure given that Region 1 is in one of the least-densely populated areas of the state and only one of the 57 school districts in that Region has an orchestra program.

There are two parts to the judging process: Pre-Area and Area. For the Pre-Area round, Regions are divided up among four Zones: Dallas/Fort Worth [DFW], Houston, Austin/San Antonio, and West/South/East Texas. The number of students allotted to each Zone for the Area round is determined by the percentage of the total number of recordings submitted by that zone.

Example violin audition: 148 total seats are available in the Area (Sunday) round. DFW has 107 violins who recorded an audition (28.46% of the total entries). They are allotted 42 seats in the Area Round. Houston has 130 violins who recorded an audition (34.57% of the total entries). They are allotted 51 seats in the Area Round. Austin/San Antonio has 80 violins who recorded an audition (21.28% of the total entries). They are allotted 31 seats in the Area Round. West/South/East Texas has 59 violins who recorded an audition (15.69% of the total entries). They are allotted 23 seats in the Area Round (p. 13).

Zones that meet or exceed their allotted number of seats in the Area round with placements in the All-State Orchestra will have two more seats allotted the following year. For example, if a Zone is allotted 42 seats in the Area round and they have 42 students selected for the All-State Orchestra, they will have a minimum of 44 seats allotted to them for the Area round in the following year. The additional seats are not taken from another Zone's allotment but are rather added to the total number of students who will advance from Pre-Area to Area.

Interpretation of All-State Data

Table 3.6 represents the TEA district classifications for the school districts attended by all student members of the TMEA All-State Orchestras between 2010 and 2020 ( $n = 3,739$ ). For a complete list of All-State Orchestra results from 2010-2020, see Appendix D. Student members include string, harp, and piano players as well as the woodwind and percussion students selected for each ensemble. Student data was obtained from the TMEA All-State historical records and cross-referenced with TEA district classifications. Some students represented in this data are multiple-year All-State students and appear more than once in the data set. Since students re-audition each year, each appearance is considered a separate data point. Of the 3,739 students selected for an All-State Orchestra between 2010 and 2020, only 16.53% attended a school in a Major Urban school district, 59.16% attended a school in a Major Suburban district, 12.62% came from an Other Central City district, 5.3% from Other Central City Suburban, 0.37% from Independent Town, 1.12% from Non-Metropolitan Stable, 0.03% from a Rural district, and 4.87% from either homeschool or private school (represented as “n/a” in Table 3.6). No schools from a Non-Metropolitan Fast Growing district were represented in this data. As previously stated, TMEA has no published data for audition entries in earlier rounds of the All-State process, so it is unclear whether the lack of schools from this district type is because no students were selected or because there weren’t any students entered from these districts to begin with.

Table 3.7 shows the TEA district classifications for the school districts attended only by orchestra students selected for one of the All-State Orchestra ensembles from 2010-2020. Piano and harp players ( $n = 73$ ) audition with the Orchestra Division and are represented in this data along with the string players ( $n = 2,507$ ). There are some slight differences when viewing the data without the wind and percussion players. For example, 19.22% of orchestra students were from a Major Urban district, 57.69% from Major Suburban, 10.54% from Other Central City, 4.73% from Other Central City Suburban, 0.19% from Independent Town, 0.77% from Non-Metropolitan Stable, 0% from Rural, and 6.86% from either homeschool or private school. The only student from a Rural district to be selected for one of the All-State Orchestra ensembles from 2010-2020 was a tuba player and is therefore not represented in the string orchestra-only data.

Table 3.8 and 3.9 show data for the Title I status of high schools attended by all students (strings, winds, and percussion) who were selected for the TMEA All-State Orchestra from 2010-2020 ( $n = 3,739$ ) disaggregated first by ensemble type and then by TEA district classification. Students attending a school that does not receive Title I funding were 84.86% of the total population for this time frame, while only 10.27% attended a school that did receive Title I funding. The other 4.87% attended either homeschool or private school, and neither are eligible for Title I funding. For all school district types but one, the number of students who attended a school that did not receive Title I funding outnumbered those who did. Students who attended a school in a Major Urban district that received Title I funding were only 23.46% of the total for that district type ( $n = 618$ ). The percentage of students attending a Title I school in a Major Suburban district was 3.12% of the total for that type ( $n = 2,213$ ). The percentages for the other district types are as follows: 24.36% of students from an Other Central City district ( $n = 472$ ) attended a Title I school; 13.64% of students from an Other Central City Suburban district ( $n = 198$ ) attended a Title I school; 42% of students from an Independent Town district ( $n = 14$ ) attended a Title I school; and 50% of students from a Non-Metropolitan Stable school district ( $n = 42$ ) attended a Title I school. The only student from a Rural school represented in this data set did not attend a Title I campus, and there were no students from Non-Metropolitan Fast Growing districts selected for the All-State Orchestra from 2010-2020.

Tables 3.10 and 3.11 represent the same data for string orchestra students only. This data includes string students ( $n = 2,507$ ) as well as harp and piano players ( $n = 73$ ) who also audition through the Orchestra Division. Despite the fact that the data shows that Title I students account for 28.12% of the total orchestra enrollment for the state (see Table 3.4), only 8.72% percent of orchestra students who were selected for one of the All-State Orchestra ensembles from 2010-2020 attended a school that receives Title I funding. Once again, non-Title I students accounted for the largest number of students (84.42%), and the other 6.86% attended either homeschool or private school, neither are eligible for Title I funding. The percentage of orchestra students selected for one of the All-State Orchestras who attended a Title I school in a Major Urban school district was 25.25% of the total for that district type ( $n = 495$ ). The number of students from a Major Suburban district who attended a Title I campus was only 1.75% of the total for that district type ( $n = 1,489$ ). Other Central City students attending a Title I campus were 18.01% of the total ( $n = 272$ ); Other Central City Suburban students from a Title I campus were 7.38% of the total ( $n = 122$ ); Independent Town students attending a Title I campus were 40% of the total ( $n = 5$ ); and students attending a Title I school in a Non-Metropolitan Stable district were 65% of the total ( $n = 20$ ). No orchestra students from Non-Metropolitan Fast Growing or Rural school districts were selected for one of the All-State Orchestra ensembles from 2010-2020.

Discussion of All-State Data

As shown in the data, students from Major Suburban school districts are overrepresented in the All-State Orchestra ensembles, while students from Major Urban districts are underrepresented. This can be seen whether viewing data with all student participants or just the data from the string, harp and piano students. This difference is especially striking when considering the relative sizes of programs in each of those district types. The average string orchestra enrollment for a Major Urban district based on the 2019 enrollment data gathered by TMEA is 662 students, while the average string orchestra enrollment for a Major Suburban district based on the same data is only 342 students (see Table 3.4). Despite the fact that Major Urban districts on average have nearly double the string orchestra enrollment of Major Suburban districts (not altogether surprising given the sheer size of Major Urban districts), more than half of the students selected for one of the All-State Orchestra ensembles between 2010-2020 were from a Major Suburban district while less than 20% of student participants came from a Major Urban district.

Perhaps even more striking than the underrepresentation of Major Urban students in the All-State Orchestras is the underrepresentation of students from Title I schools. Orchestra students attending a Title I high school in Texas make up 28.24% of the total orchestra enrollment for the state, yet only 8.72% of the string orchestra students selected for an All-State Orchestra ensemble from 2010-2020 attended a Title I school (see Table 3.10). Non-Title I students account for 71.75% of the total orchestra enrollment for the state, but 84.42% of students selected for an All-State Orchestra ensemble from 2010-2020 attended a non-Title I school.

Access to adequate resources is an essential component to making All-State. Resources in this context can be defined as the ability to afford private lessons, access to high-quality instruments, and access to instruments that can be used during the summer to practice when the All-State etudes are released. Years of playing experience can also be considered a resource when it comes to making All-State. From my experience teaching young string orchestra students, manual dexterity takes a long time to develop, and the earlier a student begins on their instrument, the greater their dexterity will be. The level of music picked for these auditions is exceptionally difficult, and the extra experience that comes from starting earlier than their peers is an enormous advantage for students for whom that is possible. These resources are typically not afforded to students in Major Urban districts, especially if they are Title I.

The discrepancies in the All-State data point to an underlying issue of equity at the local level. High-quality programs exist all over the state regardless of location and relative affluence. However, the resources required for a Texas high school student to be selected for an All-State Orchestra are simply out of reach for many low-income students. Students who wish to be considered for placement in one of these ensembles begin practicing their music at the beginning of the summer. The level of difficulty of the audition music essentially requires that students be enrolled in private lessons in order to be able to learn it. While many school districts across the state offer private lessons at the school during the school day, these programs typically do not continue over the summer. In order for students to study privately over the summer, they must be able to pay for it themselves. And while many schools may be able to offer private lesson scholarships for their students to help assist them in this endeavor, most of that funding comes from that program's own budget. A school in a low-income area may have fewer budget funds to draw from and therefore may not be able to offer much in the way of financial assistance for its students who wish to study privately, but cannot afford to do so on their own. Additionally, low-income students may not be able to afford to rent their own instrument and must rely on the availability of a school-owned instrument. While some school districts are able to supply high-quality instruments to their students, this is not necessarily the case everywhere. Students who use a school-owned instrument during the school year may not have access to that instrument over the summer. Programs at Title I schools also may not have the budget to keep high-quality strings on their instruments, further affecting the tone quality students are able to produce on loaner instruments.

The Zones used for All-State judging may allow for greater geographic representation in the All-State Orchestras, but they do not necessarily mean greater representation for urban and Title I students. Three out of the four Zones where students are judged for All-State have students from some of the wealthiest suburbs competing against students from districts with some of the highest-poverty rates in the state. Urban and suburban students are not receiving the same education, but it is not a question of student ability or quality of teaching. Good teaching is present in schools of all types, but the lack of resources that many urban students experience makes it virtually impossible to keep up with their suburban counterparts. The All-State data reflects the discrepancy between Major Suburban and Major Urban districts. Placement in an All-State ensemble may result in college scholarships, which could be lifechanging for an urban student who is the first generation in their family to attend college. The experience that urban and Title I students have in an All-State ensemble may inspire them to pursue music education and thus increase the representation of teachers from those backgrounds in the music classroom. Urban and Title I students who see teachers from similar backgrounds leading successful music programs could be further inspired to enroll and continue in music. A more equitable All-State process has the potential to impact music education statewide. Judging auditions by geographic Zones is a step in the right direction, but more needs to be done to address the lack of urban and Title I students represented at the state level. Decision-makers should examine ways to increase representation of these students so the All-State Orchestra is truly representative of the entire state.

CHALLENGES OF TITLE I PROGRAMS AND THE TEXAS HONOR ORCHESTRA PROCESS

Success in music education is often defined by ensembles with the most visibility. Bates (2018) states that “competitive...large ensembles still serve as our standard means of instruction and help sort students according to social class. Affluent schools and students, by virtue of their socioeconomic advantages, generally perform at higher levels than the less privileged do” (p. 73). In the previous chapters I discussed the All-State audition process and the different classifications of school districts within the state of Texas, which support the claim that students with socioeconomic advantages are placed in All-State Orchestras. This chapter will examine the TMEA Honor Orchestra process and selection of the finalists and winners from 2010-2020.

Challenges of Urban Music Education

Urban schools have their own set of challenges when it comes to music programs. In urban school systems, “much that is provided as a matter of course in other systems is simply not in place” (Warzer, 2006, p. 5). Abril (2006) and Smith (2006) gathered perspectives from practicing urban music educators on the challenges faced by those teaching in urban schools. Lack of parental involvement was a concern for many teachers. For some, the lack of involvement was due to parents working two or three jobs and being unable to transport students to rehearsals or concerts. Administrative support was also a concern among urban music educators, particularly when it came to educating administrators on what “a balanced, comprehensive, sequential program of music instruction entails” (Smith, 2006, p. 64). Scheduling was viewed as an issue for many teachers, with the most common issue being students of all ability levels from beginner to advanced being placed in the same class. Some teachers only saw their students once or twice a week, while others saw their students for one semester and then never again. Teachers described having to teach on a stage or from a cart, often with many distractions. Transient student populations made it difficult for instrumental music teachers to maintain balance among their ensembles (DeLorenzo, 2012; Warzer, 2006). A strong player might leave suddenly in the middle of the semester because a parent relocates due to a new job, while a new student coming in might be weeks behind the rest of their classmates. Student mobility also made it a challenge to keep track of school instrument inventory, as those instruments often moved with the students. Many urban students are expected to work outside of school, as soon as they are able, in order to support the family income (Abril, 2006; Culp & Clauhs, 2020). This makes it difficult for these students to keep up with schoolwork and activities, such as after-school rehearsals and performances. Music educators and administrators also cited teacher availability and a lack of adequate preservice training to prepare teachers for urban environments as hurdles to success (Abril, 2006; Hazelette, 2006; Smith, 2006; Warzer, 2006).

In spite of these obstacles, urban music educators have found ways to connect with their students and build successful programs. Teachers expressed the importance of having compassion, treating students with respect, and being flexible in regard to each student's individual situation (Abril, 2006). One teacher shared the story of a student whose family expected him to work outside of school. This prevented the student from being able to fully participate in his after-school jazz band rehearsals, but his teacher showed flexibility and worked out a solution that kept this student engaged and enrolled in the program. Urban music educators also emphasized the importance of connecting with the community and keeping students' education relevant to their culture (Abril, 2006; Culp & Clauhs, 2020; Kindall-Smith, 2006).

They did not have any preconceived notions about their students' ability to succeed and instead "connect[ed] with at-risk students by remaining compassionate about [their] world outside of school and maintaining high expectations" (Abril, 2006, p. 77).

Abril (2006) points out that "the traditionally underserved populations of this country, the largest concentration of which reside in urban centers, might be the people in greatest need of quality arts education" (p. 76). Research shows that urban students are on-task more often in arts classes than they are in non-arts classes and that for many of these students, art and music programs are the only reason they stay in school (Abril, 2006; Hazelette, 2006). Encouraging and preparing teachers for urban music education should be a priority. As Smith (2006) states, "they are rare and precious human capital that must not be wasted" (p. 72).

Preservice Training and Teacher Availability

Many music educators feel unprepared to teach in urban environments, particularly those who are in their first year of teaching (Abril, 2006; Hazelette, 2006; Smith, 2006). When the challenges mentioned above are considered alongside the challenges of the first year of teaching, "teaching music in an urban district may feel insurmountable to an inexperienced teacher" (Hazelette, 2006, p. 13). Smith (2006) found that new teachers expressed a wish for more field experience in urban classrooms prior to student teaching so they could "learn more about how others were successfully managing urban classrooms and rehearsal rooms" (p. 72). Negative perceptions of urban schools often deter young teachers away from those environments. Preservice teachers who lack experience with urban settings feel anxious about teaching in those schools (Kindall-Smith, 2004). Additionally, "preservice teachers have been found to view student diversity as a problem instead of a resource and express discomfort in interacting with those of backgrounds that differ from their own" (Abril, 2006, p. 77). Smith (2006) reported that urban music educators who grew up attending urban schools were more comfortable teaching in those settings than their colleagues who attended suburban or rural schools, suggesting that more should be done “to recruit prospective music educators from urban secondary schools” (p. 73). Additionally, universities in urban areas should partner with local urban schools to promote preservice teacher observations of successful urban music programs as well as place student teachers in these schools. As Kindall-Smith (2004) states, “just as important as the observations that take place in field experience courses is the opportunity for university students to discuss their observations with professors who have knowledge about and experience in urban settings” (p. 43).

Lack of teacher preparation is not the only problem plaguing urban music educators. Music administrators report a difficulty in finding and retaining teachers willing to work in urban environments (Abril, 2006; Warzer, 2006). Abril (2006) notes that “candidates with the strongest credentials have a good chance of being hired in suburban schools, where greater funds and resources are available” (p. 75). New teachers who are hired in urban districts may be placed in difficult schools, making it hard to retain teachers in areas that need them the most. Frequent reassignment of teachers and principals also makes consistency difficult in urban schools (Warzer, 2006). DeLorenzo (2012) states that “the phenomenon of teacher flight from high-poverty schools undermines every other reform effort” (p. 40).

Many urban music educators feel that their college education courses “were too focused on teaching music in ideal circumstances” (Abril, 2006, p. 77). This is perhaps due to the pressure felt by music educators to teach at programs that are viewed as highly successful. These programs are typically located at distinguished schools that are more often than not located in suburban areas. They earn many local awards and are frequently recognized at the state and occasionally at the national level. While there are many strong urban music programs that are able to find success in spite of the myriad obstacles they face, their success is not always recognized at the same level as their suburban counterparts.

Texas Honor Orchestra Process

The Texas Music Educators Association (TMEA) recognizes musical excellence every year through All-State and Honor ensembles. The All-State ensembles are comprised of individual students from music programs all over the state, while the Honor ensembles recognize the entirety of a performing group from a particular school. The TMEA Honor Band, Choir, and Orchestra process began in 1960 because “many educators believed that through the process of hearing and observing the results of quality teaching, directors could develop their own instructional skills to a higher level” (TMEA, 2019-a, para. 1).

There are four Honor Orchestra ensembles where directors may enter a group for consideration: Junior High/Middle School (JH/MS) String Orchestra, JH/MS Full Orchestra, High School String Orchestra, or High School Full Orchestra. Schools entering the Honor Orchestra process submit a recording of a performance that is 20 minutes or less in length for a JH/MS orchestra or 30 minutes or less for a High School orchestra. Recordings must be from a single performance as opposed to a composite recording of multiple performances. Recordings may not be done in private recording sessions or “under studio conditions (i.e., use of microphones for individuals or small groups, or multiple microphones placed within the ensemble)” (TMEA, 2019-b, Recording Requirements section). There is no requirement for the number of pieces performed or the level of difficulty of the selections chosen for the performance, however, the level of difficulty of a particular program is typically taken into consideration during the judging process.

There are two rounds of judging for Honor Orchestra entries, and each Honor Orchestra category is judged as its own contest. If there are 14 or fewer entries for the High School contests or 22 or fewer entries for the JH/MS contests, all entries in that contest will be judged by one five-member judging panel during Round One. If only one judging panel is used in Round One, that panel will advance six groups to the final round for that particular contest. If there are more than 14 entries for the High School contests or more than 22 entries for the JH/MS contests, the first round of judging is conducted in two different Zones. TMEA Regions are divided into Zones based on geographic location and “represent equality in numbers and strength of programs” (TMEA, 2019-b, Zones section). Both Zones are each judged by a five-member judging panel, and both panels hear the entirety of each program in Round One. The number of ensembles that advance to the final round from each Zone is “based on the number of adjudicated entries at a rate of one group to each four entries in that Zone” (TMEA, 2019-b, Advancing section). A different five-member judging panel will then judge the finalists in Round Two, with the top ranked group earning the title of Honor Orchestra in either the JH/MS String, JH/MS Full, High School String, or High School Full categories. Ensembles that earn the title of Honor Orchestra in any of these categories cannot apply for the same category the next year.

Procedures for Collecting Texas Honor Orchestra Data

Data was gathered from Honor Orchestra historical records from the TMEA website (www.tmea.org) and cross-referenced with TEA district classifications. The TMEA website consists of historical data of Honor Orchestra finalists and winners dating back to 1960. The search feature allowed me to search for Honor Orchestra data between 2010-2020. The data published on this website lists names of directors, school, and city of the orchestras who advanced to the final round. TMEA does not have published data from earlier rounds in the audition process. For a complete list of Honor Orchestra finalists and winners from 2010-2020, see Appendix E. Some schools were selected as finalists more than once and appear multiple times in the data set. Since each entry was a different recording made in subsequent years, these repetitions are considered separate data points.

Interpretation of Honor Orchestra Data

The Texas Education Agency (TEA) district classifications for all Honor Orchestra finalists between 2010-2020 ( $n = 317$ ) is represented in Table 4.1. Similar to the All-State Orchestra data found in Chapter 3, Major Suburban districts were chosen more often than Major Urban districts. Of the 317 ensembles selected as finalists (between 2010-2020), 71.29% came from a Major Suburban district, followed by 11.99% from a Major Urban district, 10.09% from an Other Central City Suburban district, and 6.62% from a district classified as Other Central City. No schools from districts classified as Independent Town, Non-Metropolitan Fast Growing, Non-Metropolitan Stable, or Rural were represented in this data. Table 4.2 represents the Title I status of Honor Orchestra finalists for the same years. Of the 317 Honor Orchestra finalists, only 2.52% came from a school receiving Title I funding. The other 97.48% were from schools that did not receive Title I funding.

Table 4.3 shows the TEA district classifications for Honor Orchestra winners between 2010-2020 (n = 44). Major Suburban school districts represented 79.55% of the total, followed by Major Urban districts at 9.09%, Other Central City Suburban districts at 6.82%, and Other Central City districts at 4.55%. None of the Honor Orchestra winners between 2010-2020 came from a school receiving Title I funding.

District Type	JH/MS String (n = 11)		JH/MS Full (n = 11)		HS String (n = 11)		HS Full (n = 11)		All Ensembles (n = 44)
	Total	%	Total	%	Total	%	Total	%	Total	%
Major Urban	1	9.09%	0	0.00%	1	9.09%	2	18.18%	4	9.09%

Other Central City Suburban	1	9.09%	2	18.18%	0	0.00%	0	0.00%	3	6.82%

As previously discussed in Chapter 3, all 11 Major Urban school districts in Texas have an orchestra program, while only 54.43% of Major Suburban school districts (43 districts in total) have orchestra programs. Additionally, 45.29% of Texas high schools with an orchestra program on their campus receive Title I funding, while the other 54.71% do not. Taking this data into consideration, Major Urban school districts and Title I schools are vastly underrepresented in both the Honor Orchestra finalist and Honor Orchestra winner data.

To elaborate on the judging process, the level of difficulty of the program selections of ensembles entering the Honor Orchestra process is typically taken into consideration during judging. An ensemble that performs well on more difficult repertoire may be rated higher than an ensemble that performs well on a less difficult program. This is where the disparity between school districts becomes evident. Ensembles from Title I schools may not be able to perform literature of a comparable difficulty level to non-Title I schools due to lack of funds for private lessons and high-quality instruments. Additionally, students attending Title I schools may start their musical education later than students attending non-Title I schools and therefore do not have as many years of playing experience. This is not to say that musical excellence does not happen at Title I schools, but this lack of resources makes it difficult for Title I programs to keep up with the level of literature expected of groups entering the Honor Orchestra process. The process of submitting a recording for Honor Orchestra can also be cost-prohibitive for many programs in low-income areas. The $250 entry fee, along with the costs associated with getting a high-quality recording, may be a barrier for schools that do not have the budget to cover these costs.

The Honor Ensemble process was temporarily suspended for all TMEA divisions during the 2020-2021 and 2021-2022 school years due to the COVID-19 pandemic. In lieu of an adjudicated contest, TMEA introduced Invited Ensembles for each division. Schools wishing to be considered for one of these ensembles submitted recordings in a similar manner to the Honor process, and then selections were made by members of the TMEA Executive Board. The goal of these ensembles was to recognize good teaching in every form it takes, particularly at schools that the honor process tends to overlook. There were six Invited Orchestras during TMEA's 2021 Virtual Clinic: two came from Major Urban school districts, one from a Major Suburban district, one Title I school from a district classified as Other Central City, and two from Other Central City Suburban districts. In addition to a wider range of school district types represented by these ensembles, there was also greater geographical representation as parts of the state that do not often see the TMEA stage were recognized. The four Invited Orchestras for the 2022 Convention (in-person), however, more closely resembled the types of ensembles typically chosen for Honor Orchestra: three of the Invited Orchestras came from Major Suburban districts (all three from the Houston suburbs), one came from an Other Central City Suburban district, and none came from a school receiving Title I funding.

The achievements of the ensembles selected as both Honor Orchestra finalists and winners should not be discounted. The Honor Orchestra process is extremely competitive, and it takes an enormous amount of effort and skill on the part of both directors and students to make it to the final stage, let alone be selected as the winner. Honor Orchestras put on incredible performances each year at the TMEA Convention, and it is inspiring to watch students perform at such a high level. However, this process has historically only honored a particular type of school from a particular type of district (see Appendix E). The successes of music programs from low-income schools typically do not look the same as the successes of their more affluent counterparts, and therefore these schools are not being recognized at the same level. Going forward, a combination of the Honor and Invited Orchestra processes could continue to allow schools to compete at a high level for recognition at the state level while also allowing schools typically overlooked in the Honor process a chance to be recognized for their successes.

Since the Honor Orchestra process began in 1960, maybe it is time to put a system in place that recognizes the successes of schools of all types regardless of geographic location or affluence. This is a critical first step in redefining what success in music education looks like. Future music educators who see urban and Title I schools recognized on a stage as highly-renowned as that of TMEA may be more inclined to seek positions in these areas. Additionally, students from urban and Title I schools who have the opportunity to perform in such venues may be inspired to seek out music education as a career in order to carry on the successes that they were able to experience themselves. Teacher educators may also adjust their methods to include strategies and practical experience for teaching music in urban and low-income schools. Music educators have a profound impact on the lives of students regardless of the location or affluence of the schools where they teach, but that impact has the potential to be greater for students who have more hurdles to overcome. Warzer (2006) says it best with the encouragement she offers her preservice teachers:

Envision what happens when you drop a stone into a pool and the water ripples out in rings to the perimeter. I am certain you will make a positive difference in the lives of young people as a music educator anywhere, but the stone drops deeper here (p. 5).

SOCIAL EMOTIONAL LEARNING AND MUSIC EDUCATION

Social Emotional Learning (SEL) is a term that is becoming more familiar to educators as the importance of emotional intelligence becomes clear, particularly in the aftermath of the COVID-19 pandemic. Several school districts in Texas are starting to incorporate SEL into their curriculum, particularly Title I schools in urban areas where the need for SEL is greater. The effects that living in poverty has on the brain are well-documented. Research shows that “the stresses of living in poverty often cause a loss of grey matter in the prefrontal cortex, which plays a role in complex cognitive tasks, social behavior, and decision making” (Sanchez, 2021, para. 2). Poverty also affects the brain’s ability to control emotions and respond appropriately to social cues, which can lead to an increase in aggressive reactions (Sanchez, 2021).

Luckily for music educators, many aspects of SEL occur naturally in the music classroom. Incorporating SEL intentionally into music lessons rather than as a by-product of the usual routine is simple to do, and it will also help to increase the emotional intelligence students are able to gain by participating in music programs. In this chapter, I will define Social Emotional Learning, discuss the importance of SEL and the benefits of incorporating it into the classroom, show the aspects of SEL that are already present in the music classroom, and discuss strategies for how I have incorporated SEL intentionally into my music lessons in an urban Title I school.

The Collaborative for Academic, Social, and Emotional Learning (CASEL) defines Social Emotional Learning this way:

SEL is the process through which all young people and adults acquire and apply the knowledge, skills, and attitudes to develop healthy identities, manage emotions and achieve personal and collective goals, feel and show empathy for others, establish and maintain supportive relationships, and make responsible and caring decisions (n.d.-a, para. 1).

Essentially, SEL is part of what makes us human and helps us to function effectively in society. CASEL (2020) breaks down SEL into five main competencies:

- 1) Self-Awareness: “the abilities to understand one’s own emotions, thoughts, and values and how they influence behavior across contexts;”
  - 2) Self-Management: “the abilities to manage one’s emotions, thoughts, and behaviors effectively in different situations and to achieve goals and aspirations;”
  - 3) Social Awareness: “the abilities to understand the perspectives of and empathize with others, including those from diverse backgrounds, cultures, and contexts;”
  - 4) Relationship Skills: “the abilities to establish and maintain healthy and supportive relationships and to effectively navigate settings with diverse individuals and groups;”
  - 5) Responsible Decision-Making: “the abilities to make caring and constructive choices about personal behavior and social interactions across diverse situations”
- (p. 2).

Music educators are in a unique position to be able to incorporate these competencies into their classrooms without having to drastically change the way they already teach. In fact, many music educators may easily recognize the ways that these competencies are already present in their classrooms. Later in this chapter I will provide a new vocabulary for strategies that are already being utilized as well as provide additional strategies for how to intentionally incorporate SEL into the music classroom.

Research shows that there are numerous benefits of Social Emotional Learning. SEL assists students with stress management, performance anxiety, and perseverance in the face of obstacles (Nogaj, 2020; Sternback, 2008). MacIntyre, Potter, and Burns (2012) also found that positive interpersonal relationships can increase student motivation. SEL leads to a decline in students' anxiety, behavior problems, and substance use, as well as long-term improvements in students' skills, prosocial behavior, and academic performance (CASEL, n.d.-a). Further, the benefits of SEL are critical for students under normal circumstances, but they are even more important now as students recover emotionally and academically from the pandemic.

The five competencies of Social Emotional Learning can be seen in many aspects of teaching already present in music classrooms. Teaching musicality and how to express emotion through music is built into the music classroom at all levels, and discussing the emotions we want to express musically with our students can help to increase their Self-Awareness. As a result, emotional expression through music can lead to increased emotional intelligence (Nogaj, 2020). Also, music students must be able to balance their coursework with before and after school rehearsals as well as individual practice time. Effective Self-Management skills and responsible decision making are necessary to be able to achieve this balance. Learning how to perform as a team and supporting classmates, either through musical performance or prosocial behavior, is built into the fabric of music education. The SEL competencies of Social Awareness and Relationship Skills are necessary to be able to do that successfully.

Another way that music teachers incorporate SEL naturally into their classrooms is through a process called facilitative teaching, which emphasizes positive teacher/student relationships and uses that relationship to guide and motivate students (Edgar, 2016). The relationship develops naturally in the music classroom due to having students for multiple years, the extra time spent with students in rehearsals and sectionals, and the emotional nature of learning music. All of these factors contribute to building strong relationships with students. The emphasis on the teacher/student relationship, as the foundation for teaching, allows students to feel comfortable opening up to teachers and coming to them with their concerns and problems. This in turn provides a unique opportunity for teachers to facilitate social and emotional growth within their students, which is particularly important for Title I schools (Sanchez, 2021).

Edgar (2016) looked at the facilitative teaching methods of four instrumental music teachers and the effect those methods had on the musical and emotional development of their students. He found that the facilitative teaching methods helped to increase the quality of the music produced (countering the assumption that spending time on emotional development takes time away from musical development), and “while not explicitly being referred to as SEL, the components of Self-Awareness, Social Awareness, Responsible Decision-Making, relationship management, and Self-Management were at the foundation of the facilitative teaching” (Edgar, 2016, p. 249). This study confirms what many music teachers already know: students who feel safe and cared for will work harder and achieve more than students who do not. With the myriad ways that SEL is already present in the music classroom, it is an easy step for music teachers to incorporate.

One method for teaching the SEL competency of Self-Assessment in the music classroom is to establish a culture of positive performance mindset. In my classroom I have discovered that for some students, the critiques given during the normal course of rehearsal are a motivator. But other students internalize those critiques and become over self-critical, which leads to performance anxiety that can be crippling for some students and lead to overcompensation in others. Sternbach (2008) states that “positive performing attitude is considered an essential ingredient in reaching peak levels of performance” (p. 45). He suggests a simple strategy for helping students to overcome their performance anxiety: ask students to say something positive about their performance. “What went right?...What did you enjoy? What are you proud of?...What is special about how you did that?” (Sternbach, 2008, p. 45). Making a habit of this in rehearsal will help shift students’ mindset from “What am I doing wrong” to “What am I doing well?” They will start looking for those positive moments because they know their teacher is going to ask about them. Sternbach (2008) also suggests shifting students into a growth mindset rather than simply focusing on mistakes by following up with the question, “What might you do differently next time?” (p. 45). With careful guidance from the teacher, this reflective self-assessment can help students to think critically about the ways they can improve their performance without focusing on the negative.

Teachers of beginning strings may be familiar with Orchestra Karate, an adaptation of Philipak’s Recorder Karate. Orchestra Karate is a great way to motivate students to practice towards specific goals. Students can earn “belts” (pieces of yarn or colorful string tied around their pegs) for learning certain skills or pieces of music—for example, learning all of their notes on the D string or learning how to play Hot Cross Buns. Jacobi (2012) suggests an excellent way to repurpose this activity to help work on the SEL competencies of Relationship Skills and Social Awareness: create a buddy system where students help one another earn belts. Jacobi’s adaptation encourages a belt-holder in a particular skill team up with a student who is still struggling in that area. If the struggling student earns a belt with the help of their buddy, the helper earns a bead to put on their belt. Experience has shown that the buddy system helps encourage prosocial behavior as well as build a positive classroom culture.

As teachers, our goal for our students is musical excellence, but learning can be a messy process, especially in Title I schools. It is important to teach students Self-Management skills. One way to do this is to teach them how to make and then learn from mistakes. “First time, worst time” is a phrase I use whenever I am teaching my students a new skill, warm up, or piece of music. I use this phrase to let my students know that the first time they try something, it will probably not be perfect, but mistakes are okay! Mistakes are part of the learning process, but what’s important is that students do not quit when something goes wrong. By not quitting, they are learning how to persevere in the face of a difficult task, and every subsequent repetition will be a little bit better. When students are able to shift into a growth mindset, they will be able to focus more on how they are improving and not that something went wrong in the first place.

Another technique I use to get students comfortable with making mistakes is “wrong on purpose.” I will often use this if students are struggling to learn a particular bowing technique or to help tune a particular passage in their music. For example, if my students are having a hard time learning to play in a light, classical style, I will have them play it wrong on purpose at two opposite extremes. First, I have them play using very heavy, short, choppy bow strokes near the frog (students love this because of the scratchy sound it makes on their instruments). Then I have them do the opposite by playing at the very tip of the bow using very light, wispy bow strokes. Finally, I have them come back to the middle of their bow and play using a medium amount of weight: not too heavy like they did at the frog, and not too light like they did at the tip, but Goldilocks (just right). This has the dual effect of teaching students the correct style while also getting them comfortable playing incorrectly in a safe environment. I can call back to this exercise in subsequent lessons to remind students of the correct way to play in a manner that helps students recognize that a correction needs to be made without feeling embarrassed for making a mistake. I use this to teach students that mistakes are opportunities for learning. We practice making mistakes so that when one happens “in the wild,” so to speak, students are more likely to be able to jump over that hurdle because they have done it so many times before.

A more direct way to include SEL in the music classroom is to teach, model, and praise the SEL skills that are desired from students. CASEL (2017) provides numerous strategies for directly incorporating the five core competencies into lessons, and many of these can be easily adapted to fit into the music classroom. One such adaptation for self-assessment in the music classroom is to ask questions that help students reflect on their own strengths and interests. For example, if students are rehearsing a piece they particularly enjoy, the teacher can say, “I can tell you’re really enjoying this. Can you tell me what about this is making you so happy?” (CASEL, 2017, p. 4). This is a simple way to get students to think about what they are feeling while also talking about musical expression and how emotions can affect performance. Injecting simple, reflective questions such as this into the regular rehearsal routine allow for both lessons to be taught simultaneously.

In the same manner that a teacher would model the correct way to perform a musical skill or what good rehearsal behavior looks like, modeling SEL gives students a positive example to follow when it comes to acknowledging and addressing the way they are feeling. CASEL (2017) suggests teachers talk to their students about their own feelings, as a means of modeling self-assessment by reflecting on how they knew what they were feeling and how it influenced their behavior at that moment. Music teachers can adapt this by speaking about their feelings regarding their own musical learning. For example, educators can talk about a time when they felt proud for mastering a skill, or about a time when they felt anxious before a performance. By describing the specific actions they took to either arrive at or overcome a particular emotion, educators can lead the way for students to do the same. Opening up and sharing these moments with students will help them feel much more comfortable doing the same. Practicing this skill on something as simple as talking about the music or a performance will help students acknowledge and communicate their emotions about other experiences they may be having at school or at home.

Self-Management is Self-Assessment in action. Incorporating Self-Management techniques can help students combat performance anxiety as well as curb any potential misbehavior. Belly breathing (or taking deep breaths) and mental rehearsal are both effective Self-Management techniques that can be taught in the music class. Teach students to take a deep breath before playing to help ease any nerves they may be feeling (especially before an individual assessment or performance on a solo), or before acting on an impulse that may get them in trouble (stop and take a breath before acting). Mental rehearsal is a technique that can be used to help build confidence and ease anxiety. In this technique, students practice a skill in their heads and imagine success while doing so (for example, shifting correctly to third position). Utilizing this technique will not suddenly make students be able to play perfectly, but imagining success will help students build the confidence they need to keep trying until they get it right.

CASEL (2017) suggests that teachers model Self-Management techniques by communicating to students when they are using them. For example, “I’m feeling a little frustrated, so I’m going to stop and take a breath before I decide what to do next” (CASEL, 2017, p. 6). Seeing those techniques in action will help students replicate them on their own. Authentic praise is a common classroom management technique (i.e., telling students “Thank you for raising your hand,” or “Thank you for sitting quietly while we tune”) and can be just as effective when used for SEL. For example, praise a student for taking a breath and waiting their turn during an activity or for choosing to shadow bow instead of interrupting the class by playing over another section. Praising SEL techniques when teachers see them in action will not only encourage students to use those techniques again, but it might also motivate their classmates to do the same. In my experience, public praise in front of the class tends to work better for younger students. Older students seem to respond better to one-on-one attention and may benefit more from a quiet comment as you move around the classroom or as the student is leaving class for the day.

Praise should also be used when students persevere in the face of a difficult task (or in the case of the music classroom, in a challenging new technique or difficult passage of music). For example, at the end of a difficult exercise, tell students, “I know how challenging that was, but you never gave up. I am proud of you, and you should be proud of yourselves” (CASEL, 2017, p. 9). It is important to praise perseverance even if students made some mistakes while they were playing. Not giving up is more important than not making mistakes. The goal is to make small improvements every time a task is repeated and to keep going no matter what happens.

All of the previous strategies have been for intentional ways to implement SEL into the music classroom, but the best teaching moments are not always planned. Having an understanding of SEL and some strategies to fall back on will help when those situations arise and make them meaningful for both teacher and student alike. I teach in a Title I school in an urban district in Texas and recently had some chances for opportunistic instruction with two of my students. The first was with one of my 8th graders. I noticed after lunch one day that this student was leaning over in his chair with his head in his hands. When I went to check on him, I realized he was crying, so I pulled him into the hallway to see what was going on. He was clearly embarrassed to be crying in front of anyone, let alone his teacher, but after some gentle coaxing I was able to get him to open up. He told me that his parents were fighting a lot at home and had been for over a year. He was having trouble concentrating in school because he was always thinking about what was going on at home, which was starting to affect his grades. One stressor was leading to another, and the cycle was getting to be too much for him. Because I had a relationship established with this student, I was able to get him to open up to me and convince him to speak with the counselor about what he was experiencing. He was reluctant at first, saying that he didn't like to talk about his situation because it made him really upset, but I reminded him that acknowledging his feelings was okay. I told him that he needed to be able to think about what he was feeling in order to be able to process it. After that conversation, he started to advocate for himself by acknowledging when he was sad or anxious (a difficult task for junior high boys to do) and reaching out to the counselors on his own when he needed to. In other words, he was able to use Self-Assessment and Self-Management techniques to get the help he needed.

The second anecdote I will share happened with one of my 7th graders. I greet my students at the door every day before class, and on this particular day I noticed that my normally happy and upbeat student was walking with her shoulders hunched over and lower lip practically trembling. I asked her how she was doing, and she gave me a big thumbs down and said, "Bad!" I stopped her and asked her why. She replied, "I just got my very first tardy ever and now it's going to be on my permanent record!" Based on her demeanor, I was expecting her to say something much worse than a tardy, because as teachers we might be tempted to respond to such exclamations with, "That is not a big deal." What may seem inconsequential to us is frequently significant for our students. My student was genuinely distressed, so I coached her through the moment and told her that one tardy was not going to ruin her permanent record. I advised her to learn from this experience by walking a little bit more quickly to class. I checked in with her the next day to see if she had made it on time to her previous class period, and she replied with her usual level of cheer, “Yep! And now I’m early to this class, too!” She used Self-Management to turn her distress into a solution. And now having practiced that Self-Management technique in a smaller situation, she will be able to apply it when something more daunting than a tardy happens.

I use these examples to show that SEL can be taught in the obvious moments when students are experiencing big emotions, but it can also be taught in the smaller moments as well. Every student is on their own journey, and every opportunity teachers can give them to practice these skills, no matter how small, is an opportunity worth taking. SEL is now more important than ever as educators deal with the aftermath of the COVID-19 pandemic. In addition to academic gaps, students are also experiencing major gaps in their social development. The five SEL competencies of Self-Awareness, Self-Management, Social Awareness, Relationship Skills, and Responsible Decision-Making are underdeveloped for many students. Educators are struggling to close these emotional gaps while also maintaining high academic standards to satisfy the requirements of state-mandated testing, which is now back to its pre-pandemic requirements.

These struggles are particularly challenging for teachers in Title I schools. As previously mentioned, living in poverty has negative effects on the brain. Students in Title I schools are more likely to experience the effects of living in poverty and the emotional gaps that come with it. The academic gaps due to the pandemic are also greater at Title I schools because many students lacked access to adequate technological resources during virtual and hybrid learning. I had several students tell me they couldn’t attend our live classes during the 2020-2021 school year because they had to care for a younger sibling or because their internet was too slow. Many parents of Title I students were essential workers and were unable to work from home, which meant that students learning virtually were at home unattended. Students without someone at home to monitor their online coursework fell farther behind. Research regarding the academic and emotional benefits of SEL show that SEL interventions that address the five core competencies increased students' academic performance by 11 percentile points, compared to students who did not participate...

[and] students participating in SEL programs showed improved classroom behavior, an increased ability to manage stress and depression, and better attitudes about themselves, others, and school (CASEL, n.d.-b, The Benefits of SEL section).

By finding the natural occurrences of SEL in their classrooms and tweaking those moments to teach those skills intentionally, music educators can have a profound effect on the emotional development of their students and help to close the emotional gap.

Conclusion

The TMEA stage is the epitome of musical excellence in Texas. Whether it is recognizing individual student achievement through the All-State ensembles or recognizing excellent music programs through the Honor Ensemble process, these honors are highly sought after by students and teachers alike. The data shows, however, that these ensembles are not truly representative of the state as a whole. To many in the profession, particularly those who teach in urban areas, the lack of representation of urban and Title I students at the state level is unfortunately not a surprise. These students typically lack the resources required to be recognized at that level, namely private lessons, year-round access to a high-quality instrument, and availability of a dedicated practice space. SEL can also be considered a resource for urban and Title I students. Students who lack in this area may have a more difficult time achieving at a high level both academically and musically. Students who struggle academically are more likely to get pulled from electives, such as music to take remedial courses, making it difficult for teachers in urban areas to recruit and retain students. And while Title I funds can be used to support fine arts programs, schools may be more likely to use these funds for academic programs designed to increase student achievement and improve test scores.

All-State audition results for 2021 and 2022 suggest that the COVID-19 pandemic has had a significant effect on urban and Title I orchestra students. For a complete list of All-State Orchestra data for 2021 and 2022, see Appendix F. Only 13.61% of students selected for an All-State Orchestra ensemble from 2021-2022 attended a school in a Major Urban district, compared to 19.22% from 2010-2020 (see Table 3.7). The 2021-2022 results also reflected a decrease in the number of Title I students selected for All-State as compared to 2010-2020 (6.91% and 8.72%, respectively; see Table 3.10). The most alarming difference in the 2021-2022 data comes from looking at the Title I status of schools of each TEA district type represented in the All-State results. The 2021 All-State Orchestra results show that 25% of student members from a Major Urban district attended a school receiving Title I funding, nearly identical to the 25.25% from 2010-2020 (see Table 3.11). For 2022, however, only 14.29% of student members from a Major Urban district attended a Title I school.

Despite these obstacles, students and teachers from urban areas still manage to find success, however, these successes are not being recognized at the state level. As previously stated, a combination of Honor and Invited Orchestra could help increase the representation of schools that aren't typically recognized through that process while also continuing to allow schools to compete at a high level. To address the issues of equity in the All-State process, future research could first examine the number of urban and Title I students who audition in each Area round. If there are low entries from these students to begin with, researchers could investigate what could be done to encourage more participation. It would be interesting to see how many urban students advance to the second round. Future research could also examine whether the disparity between urban and suburban students at the state level is true for the Band and Vocal divisions, as well.

I am hopeful that this thesis will start a conversation resulting in a more equitable process. Our definition of success in music education is heavily influenced by the achievements we see displayed at the highest level. A system that overlooks a significant portion of its population also overlooks the many variations of success that exist throughout the state. An increase in visibility of urban and Title I students performing at the highest level is the first step towards reshaping our collective definition of success and designing systems that are truly representative of the entire state.
