A HISTORY OF
AMERICAN LITERATURE
I.
1607–1676
BY MOSES COIT TYLER
PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH LITERATURE IN THE UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN
NEW YORK
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS
182 FIFTH AVENUE
1898
TO

SAMUEL COIT, OF HARTFORD, AND

GEORGE COIT, OF NORWICH,

MY LIEUTENANT AND BENEFACIORS,

I DEDICATE

This Work

IN TOKEN OF UNCEASING GRATITUDE.
CONTENTS.

FIRST COLONIAL PERIOD: 1607-1676.

CHAPTER I.
THE BEGINNING.

I.—The Provenience of the first English-speaking colonies from the old world to the new—Our first literary period that of the planting of the American nation—Our first American writers immigrant Americans—True Fathers of American Literature—The literary traits they brought with them................................................................. 1
III.—Birth year of American literature—State of English Literature when American literature was born—Interest of Englishmen then in their barbaric American empire—Departure from England of the first English Americans—Michael Drayton's farewell ode to them................................................................. 11

CHAPTER II.
VIRGINIA: THE FIRST WRITER.

I.—The arrival in America of the first Americans—A fortunate blunder—Satisfaction with their new home................................................................. 16
II.—The sort of men they were—Their leaders—Captain John Smith—His previous career—His character—His important relation to early American settlements—The first writer in American Literature................................................................. 17
CONTENTS

IV.—His second American writing—A bold letter to his London patrons—His knowledge relating to be exasperated by their ignorance—The kind of men to make good colonists of—Early symptoms of American revolutions. .................................................. 27

V.—His third American work—Vivid pictures of Virginia—The climate—The country—The productions—The Indians—His fine statement of the policy of the Virginia enterprise. ......................... 30

VI.—Capitulates John Smith’s return to England—His subsequent career—A failed explorer—His part in the American colonies—Utilized by the playwrights—Thomas Fuller’s sarcastic account of him—His champion—Final estimate. .................................................. 35

CHAPTER III.

VIRGINIA: OTHER EARLY WRITERS.

I.—George Percy of Northumberland—His works—His graphic sketches of the savagery and gloom of their first year in America. .................................................. 29

II.—William Strachey—His terrible voyage and wreck with Sir Thomas Gates—His book descriptive of the state of the colony in Virginia—Some gems of Shakespeare’s Tempest—Strachey’s wonderful picture of a storm at sea. .................................................. 41

III.—Alexander Whitaker, the devoted Christian missionary—His life and death and memory in Virginia—His appeal to England in “Good News from Virginia.” .................................................. 45

IV.—John Poyntz—His coming to Virginia—His previous career—A convert—and a colonist—His return to England—His amusing sketches of Indian characters—The honors and consolations of pioneer life along the James River. .................................................. 48

V.—George Sandys—His high personal qualities and his fine genius—His literary services before coming to America—Michael Drayton’s eulogium on the Mass in Virginia—Sandys’s fidelity to his literary career amid poverty and distress—His translations of Ovid—In relation to poetry and scholarship in the new world—Passages from it—The story of Phaedra—His poetic renown. .................................................. 50

CHAPTER IV.

VIRGINIA: ITS LITERATURE DURING THE REMAINDER OF THE FIRST PERIOD.

I.—The establishment of Maryland upon the territory of Virginia—Maryland’s slight literary record for this period blended with that of Virginia—Father Andrew White and his Latin narrative—John
CONTENTS

Hammond, the Anglo-Americans, studying the social problems of England—His solution of them in the new America—His book, "Leach and Rachel," and its original American flavor. 60

II.—George Ahear—His life in Maryland—His dull book about Maryland—Comic description of the efforts of his voyagers—Vivid accounts of the country, of its productions. 65

III.—Sketch of Bacon's rebellion in 1676—The heroic and capable qualities of Bacon—The anonymous manuscript relating to the rebellion—Literary indications furnished by these writings—Descriptions of a belled neighbors Indian fort—Of Bacon's conflicts with Berkeley—Of Bacon's military strangeness—Bacon's death—Noble poem upon his death. 69

IV.—Review of the literary record of Virginia during this period—Its comparative barrenness—Explanation found in the personal traits of the founders of Virginia—And in their peculiar social organization—Resulting in inferior public prosperity—Especially in lack of schools and of intellectual stimulus—Sir William Berkeley's harmful influence—Printing prohibited in Virginia by the English government—Religious freedom prohibited by the people of Virginia—Literary development impossible under such conditions. 80

CHAPTER V.

NEW ENGLAND TRAITS IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

I.—Transition from Virginiu to New England—The max-qualities of the first New-Englanders—The period of their coming—Their numbers, and the multitude of their posterity. 93

II.—Two classes of Englishmen in the seventeenth century: those exisinting upon the world's antipathies, those demanding a new depeure—From the second class came the New-Englanders—The purpose of their coming as ideal one. 96

III.—Their individuality—The large number of their learned men—
Their esteem for learning. 98

IV.—Their characteristics of character—Religious the main thought—Their conceptions of providence and of prayer—Their religious intensity leading to solemnness, to spiritual pedantry, to a jurisprudence based on theology, and to persecution. 100

V.—The outward forms of New England life—Its prosperity—Literature in early New England—A literary class from the first—Circumcstances favorable to literary action—The limits of their literary studies—Restrains upon the liberty of printing—Other disadvantages—The quality in them which gave assurance of literary development. 109
CHAPTER VI.

NEW ENGLAND: HISTORICAL WRITERS.

I.—Early development of the historic conception in New England: 113
II.—William Bradford—His career in England, Holland, and America.
   His History of Plymouth—Significance of the manuscript—The fitness for historical writing—Outline of the work—Condition and feelings of the Pilgrims when first made at Plymouth—Portrayal of a distinct mentalitv—The ideas needed by the founder of colonies—Colloquial personal aspects of the Pilgrims—Their present-day popularity—Summary of this historian's life.... 116 III.—Nathaniel Moore—His life—His "Memorial," and how he made it—Lack of originality in its not in him:...... 116 IV.—The calling of the Winthrop family—John Winthrop himself—His "Model of Christian Charity"—His "History of New England"—
   An historical diary—Its minute fidelity and graphic power—
   Principles—His former speech..... 128 V.—Edward Johnson—His "Wonder-Working Providence"—How he was to write it—Before the greatest and smallest of the New England Puritans—Examples—Its literary peculiarities........ 127 VI.—The career of the Puritans—John Winthrop in the Ion and his history—His bond—His story of the Mystic River............ 146 VII.—The high work of Daniel Gookin—An American essayist, poet, and philosopher—The trials and triumphs of his life—His two historical works relating to the Indians............. 154

CHAPTER VII.

NEW ENGLAND: DESCRIPTIONS OF NATURE AND PEOPLE IN AMERICA.

I.—Sensations of the first Americans to the peculiar phenomena of the new world.............. 158
II.—"Journal" of Bradford and Winslow—First contact of the Pilgrims with America—Congregationalism—American fashions—Indian visit—An Indian king at home—Winslow's letter—His "Good News from New England"—History as unfolded by the Indians—Men who are not called to be colonists.............. 173 III.—Puritan Pilgrims—churchmen, dissentors, immigrants—His "First Relation"—His "New England's Plimition"—Picture of man and land—The bright side of things in America............ 166
IV.—William Wood—His "New England's Prospect"—His unassuming literary ability—Analysis of his book—His defence of the liberty of travel—His power of description—Mirth of his prose—Mistress Holman—Waters, hummocks, hills, fishes—Elegant and playful details of Indians............. 170
CONTENTS.

V.—John Joscelin—His kindness—No lover of the New England Puritans—His habits in America—A seventeenth century naturalist in our woods—His "New England's Rarities Discovered"—His "Two Voyages to New England"—The White Hills—His true value as a reporter of natural history—Generous gifts to the credulous reader—His friendly attitude toward the unknown............ 183

CHAPTER VIII.

NEW ENGLAND: THEOLOGICAL AND RELIGIOUS WRITERS.

I.—The supremacy of the clergy in early New England—Their worthlessness—Their public manifestations—How they studied and preached—The quality and vastness of the work they did...................... 186

II.—Thomas Hooker one of the three greatest—His career in England—Comes to Massachusetts—Founds Hartford—A prolific writer—His commanding traits as a man and an orator—His published writings—Literary characteristics—His weakness in sermons—Practical preaching—Total depravity—Formalism—Need of Christ—The sincerity and pathos of his appeals.................... 193

III.—New England's debt to Archbishop Laud—Thomas Shepard's animated interview with him, and its consequences—Shepard's settlement in America—Personal peculiarities—Illustrations of his theology and method of discourse...................... 204

IV.—John Cotton—His love for St. Mary's Church, Cambridge—Becomes rector of St. Botolph's, Boston—His great fame in England—His ascendency in New England—Correspondence with Cromwell—His death announced by a comet—As a student and writer................................................. 210

V.—A group of minor prophets—Peter Bulkeley founder of Concord—The man—His "Gospel Covenant"—John Norton—Succeeds John Cotton—His style as a writer—William Hooper—His life—His "New England's Tears for Old England's Tears"—Charles Chauncey's career in England and America—Becomes president of Harvard—Great usefulness as an educator—His scholarship, industry, and age—His "Plain Doctrine of Justification"—His unpublished writings made useful................................. 216

CHAPTER IX.

NEW ENGLAND: MISCELLANEOUS PROSE WRITERS.

I.—Nathaniel Ward and his influence with Laud—His position in early American literature—His large experience before coming to America—A reminiscence of Prince Rupert...................... 227
CHAPTER X.

NEW ENGLAND: THE VERSE-WRITERS.

I.—The attitude of Patriotism toward Art.—Especially toward Poetry—The unostentatious poetry in Vivium.................................................. 264
II.—The Puritans of New England universally addicted to versification —The merit of their elegies and epitaphs—The poetic expertness of Pastor John Wilson................................................................. 266
III.—The pleasant legend of William Morrell—His poem in Latin and English on New England .................................................. 271
IV.—The prophesy of the Bay Psalm Book—Its Reversion and Fabrification—Their comminations made of proceeding—a book, sadly and wonderfully made................................................................. 274
V.—Anne Bradstreet the earliest professional poet of New England—First appearance of her book—Her errors—Her prose writing—Her training for poetry—Her guides and masters the later emphasises in English verse—List of her poetical works—Analysis of "The Four Elements"—"The Four Monarchies"—"The fundamental error in her poems—Her "Contemplations"—The first part of the Menstrual—Her devout poems—Her allusions to contemporary politics—Her championship of women—Final esti- mates................................................................. 277